GREAT BRITAIN SEIZES TURKISH PORT

WAR MAKES ORPHANS CRY FOR U. S. HOMES

Estimate of European Need Cited for American Families.

TRIBUNE STARTS MOVE

ONE of THE TRIBUNE war correspondents, following the armies in Belgium, drove his motor car through a village where a battle had raged the day before. Half the heavy stone houses which walled the narrow street had been broken down by exploding shells.

On the Belgian block pavement lay, as they had fallen, ten or twelve dead soldiers of the opposing armies. The flight and the pursuit had swept on, leaving the little village silent and desolate. Not a living thing was in sight.

Just on the outskirts of the village the chauffeur suddenly stopped his car. At the edge of the road lay the body of a little boy, a child of 5 years, caught as he ran and killed by shrapnel.

"PLEASE WAKE MY BROTHER."

And by his side sat a baby girl of 3 or 4 years. She looked up at the men in the car, smiled, and held out her hands to be taken up.

Lisping in French, she told them her name, said she was very hungry, cried a little, and as the car started on begged them to wait and wake up her brother.

Wherever the wave of war has swept across Europe there are children in like case. Nobody knows how many children have lost their fathers, have been separated from their mothers, had their homes destroyed, or been thrown out into a world which has turned all its energies to the terrible business of war.

THE TOLL IN ORPHANS.

There are more than 6,000,000 men actually living week after week in the deep dug war trenches. Most of them are fathers. It is the sole object of each of them to kill the men in the opposite trenches. When the lines crawl forward detachments follow to pick up the wounded and to bury the dead. Often the bodies are simply piled together and burned.

The most conservative estimates of the number already killed are staggering. Certainly the death roll for the first three months of the war contains 300,000 names. And certainly half of these dead soldiers left wives and children.

Exactly because this is the greatest war in history, with the thickest curtain of secrecy pulled down over the terrible picture, it is certain there is the greatest suffering among the women and children of the soldiers who are fighting in the dark.

CALL TO AMERICAN HEARTS.

There are more widows, more orphaned children, more ruined homes, more starving babies—more need for the people of the United States to open their own, arms and hearts to the little ones who else are likely to perish.

It is because THE TRIBUNE knows these facts that it has decided to act as an intermediary and messenger between the homeless children of Europe and the childless homes of the United States. Nor need the home be childless, for one of the first to offer a place at its hearth to one of the war orphans was a family which is already rearing six children of its own.

That there is pressing need for the work is demonstrated by the action of the generous people of Switzerland, who have already offered to adopt as members of their families 2,000 Belgian orphans. Since the war began 500 widows and orphans from the devastated lowlands have found new hopes amidst the Alps.

FLIGHT OF REFUGEES.

The public has not yet forgotten the stories of the Belgian refugees, the long processions of women and children and old men and women fleeing from sword and fire. In those wild flights through the night children were separated from their parents, families were broken up,

Homes for the War Orphans.

There are thousands of fatherless and homeless children in the war zone of Europe.

Cold, starvation, disease, and the blind violence of war threaten the destruction of these innocents.

There are thousands of childless families in the United States who would gladly give them temporary or permanent homes.

It is the purpose of "The Tribune" to bring the two together under conditions which will safeguard the interests of both.

The plan has been indorsed by representatives of the Belgian government in the United States, though it is not intended to confine the work to the war orphans of that desolated kingdom. The announcement has been received with eager and touching enthusiasm by the warm hearted people of the middle west. Already numerous families have asked for the privilege of receiving the small victims of war into their homes.

"The Tribune" recognizes that the undertaking is a serious and important one. As rapidly as possible the necessary arrangements are being made under the advice and direction of experienced and capable social workers.

AUTO THIEF RUNS DOWN 2 IN DASH

When Mr. and Mrs. I. W. Lederer and their guests, Mr. and Mrs. S. H. Israel, finished their dinner at the Blackstone hotel last evening they had determined upon a spin over the boulevards. Mr. Lederer's automobile stood in Michigan avenue, outside the hotel.

The four were advancing across the sidewalk to enter the car when a man, dressed as a chauffeur, brushed past them. He leaped into the driver's seat of the Lederer car, started it, and the next moment was careening north in the avenue.

Wild Chase in Avenue.

The cry of "Automobile thief!" halted Motorcycle Policeman Henry Rauscher. The policeman turned his cycle and sped after the thief. The robber was making thirty miles an hour down the crowded avenue, Rauscher says. With the policeman in pursuit he whirled past other vehicles and dodged traffic patrolmen until Van Buren street was reached. Pedestrians scurried for their lives. James A. Ostrom of 5039 Blackstone avenue scurried, but not quick enough. He was struck by the speeding car and hurled into a crowd. With a broken shoulder, internal injuries, and concussion of the brain, he was taken to St. Luke's hospital.

An automobile owned by Dr. F. Lower, a physician, with offices in the Mallers building, was slightly damaged when the stolen automobile collided with his car.

Policeman Fires Shots.

The thief dashed on. The policeman gained on him and drew his motorcycle alongside the car. He drew his revolver and fired two shots in the air, commanding the robber to stop. Then the patrolman lost control of his motorcycle and had to drop his weapon in the street to keep from skidding into a crowd of watchers.

At Adams street the thief ran down James Sterling of 514 West Twenty-seventh street. Sterling's spine was hurt. He was taken to St. Luke's hospital.

Leaps from Machine.

By this time other autoists had joined in the pursuit of the robber, who, at Madison street, slowed down his machine and leaped from it. He darted into the lobby of the Silversmith building at the Madison street corner and there the policeman nailed him.

ANOTHER MAD DASH IN LOOP.

Pedestrians narrowly escaped injury yesterday when William Hoard of 739 East Thirty-ninth street, colored, drove an automobile thirty miles an hour in Wabash avenue in an attempt to escape from Mounted Policeman George Standerwick, who was pursuing him. At Randolph street the automobile crashed into a Cottage Grove avenue car and Hoard was hurled ten feet out on the pavement He escaped with bruises and was locked up pending investigation as to where he obtained the automobile.

'Twilight Sleep' Not Dangerous, 150 Cases Show

FAILURES ARE FEW

New York, Nov. 7.—[Special.]—Dr. Jacob Heller printed in today's issue of the Medical Record the results of his study of 150 cases of "twilight sleep" in childbirth, in which he reaches the conclusion that the treatment—an improved form of nitrous oxide (laughing gas, so-called) and oxygen—involves no special danger to mother or child.

"Judicious use, with proper precautions," he says, "prove that the method is capable of relieving pain in 90 per cent of cases, and is free from any risk to life or health."

"In 122 cases, or 81.3 per cent," the article continues, "we succeeded in obtaining complete amnesia, or obliteration of memory, and an almost equal degree of analgesia, or insensibility to pain. All that occurred during the time the patient was under the influence of the drugs was wiped out of her memory. In thirteen, or 8.7 per cent, we got analgesia without amnesia.

Some Cases Without Result.

"In fifteen cases, or in 10 per cent, we failed to obtain any marked results. With our present experience it is quite possible to reduce the number of failures to a smaller figure, but since the sensitiveness of the nervous system varies in different individuals, as does the susceptibility to drugs, there will always be some cases that will not be influenced.

"Of the 152 children (two of the births being twins), not one was born still; that is, failed of resuscitation. Three of the children died within a short time after birth. One died three hours after birth, a second died three days later, and the third one apparently from hemorrhage. We could obtain no post mortem to verify our assumption and so this death remains doubtful.

"But even if we should credit it to 'Twilight sleep,' the child mortality would be 0.6 or 1 per cent, comparing more than favorably with the ordinary mortality of 1.5 per cent. One hundred and twenty of the children cried out immediately and spontaneously."

Tells of Administration.

"Half an hour after the first injection," Dr. Heller writes concerning the effect of scopolamin on the woman, "the patient usually becomes flushed. She is somewhat drowsy and her pains diminish. With the second dose the sleep deepens.

"It is not until after the third injection that memory is affected. This state continues until the birth of the child, when she falls in a quiet and natural sleep lasting in our patients about three hours. She awakens rested and cheerful, free from any shock or sign of exhaustion, no matter how long the labor lasted."

All She's Gotta Do Is Feel Your Pulse and She Can Nail a Lie Every Time.

New York, Nov. 7.—[Special.]—Your wife can tell when you're lying by tenderly pressing your hand—with a deft finger on the wrist.

This discovery was revealed to New York today by Dr. Louisa Burns of the Still Research institute, Chicago, in her lecture before the New York Osteopathic society at the Park Avenue hotel.

"The pulse records the vagaries of a mendacious mind just as surely as a dictagraph," she said. "A man may learn to lie with a straight face, but the human being has yet to be born who can lie with a steady blood pressure."

Dr. Burns didn't say anything about feminine falsifiers. The inference was that they could do it any way.

STEEL MILLS IN GARY CLOSE FOR ONE WEEK.

Shutdown Will Affect 7,000 Men—Buffington Says It is Only Temporary.

Gary, Ind., Nov. 7.—[Special.]—Orders were given today to close the Gary steel mills, which comprise the Illinois Steel company, the American Bridge company, and the American Sheet and Tinplate company plants.

The order will affect about 7,000 men. This is the first time in the history of the Gary plant that there has been a total shut down. Work, it is said, will be resumed on Nov. 15.

President E. J. Buffington of the Illinois Steel company in a statement said that while operations would be curtailed it is no indication that the mills will remain idle for the remainder of the year.

BRITISH COAST CITY SHELLED BY GERMANS

Berlin Says Sea Raid of Nov. 3 Was Pushed to Yarmouth.

TRAP SHIPS OFF CHILE.

BULLETIN.

LIMA, Peru, Nov. 7.—It is reported here that a Japanese squadron cruising along the coast of Peru has captured the German cruisers Scharnhorst and Gneisenau.

[Vague rumors of the capture of the cruisers Scharnhorst and Gneisenau have been persistent since Oct. 31, when a dispatch to London from Sydney, N. S. W., said they had been taken as a result of the failure of their coal supply. Friday a Tokio rumor, coming by way of London, fixed the date of the alleged capture as Saturday, Oct. 31, but failed to designate the place, saying merely that the cruisers were coaling when surprised. This obviously was wrong, as the engagement in which the British squadron was defeated and in which the Gneisenau and Scharnhorst took part was fought the following day. The last tidings of the cruisers was that after coaling at Valparaiso they put to sea last Wednesday.]

[By Cable to The Chicago Tribune.]

BERLIN, via The Hague, Nov. 7.—The German admiralty tonight issued the following statement:

"Three German cruisers on Nov. 3 shelled the British fortifications near Yarmouth and some small vessels in the harbor. The British submarine D-5, which attempted to torpedo them, was sunk. The cruisers after their work was completed returned safely to their base."

[The British admiralty report of the German cruiser raid of last Tuesday stated German cruisers had attacked the torpedo gunboat Halcyon and a detachment of mine layers and had sunk one mine layer, badly damaged another, and caused "some" damage to the Halcyon. While pursuing, it said, the submarine D-5 struck a mine thrown overboard by the German ships in their retreat and was sunk, with the loss of all but two officers and two sailors. The next day the German cruiser Yorck struck a mine in Jade bay, on the North sea, near the mouth of the Weser. It is possible that the Yorck was one of the raiding fleet and was sunk by a German mine while trying to return to her base.]

NIGHT BATTLE IN NORTH SEA.

LONDON, Nov. 7.—Residents of Herne Bay, a seaside resort on the east coast of England, were awakened between midnight and 1 o'clock this morning by the sounds of heavy firing in the North sea.

The cause of the firing has not been ascertained.

CHILE SENDS SHIPS TO RESCUE.

VALPARAISO, Nov. 7. — The Chilean steamers Valdive and Chiloe, flying Red Cross flags, have sailed with sealed orders from the government.

The transport Maipo was dispatched earlier.

It is assumed that the mission of the vessels has to do with the report that the British cruiser Monmouth was driven ashore on the Chilean coast after the naval engagement of Sunday.

JAP SQUADRON OFF CHILE.

The Japanese steamers which have been held in the harbor here ever since the arrival of the German squadron, following its battle with Admiral Cradock's British squadron on Sunday, sailed for Japanese ports today.

This action is believed to have been ordered by wireless from out at sea and is accepted as proof that a Japanese warship squadron is now off the South American coast.

SERVIAN LAD IS VETERAN.

Twelve Year Old Boy Already in Seven Battles—Made Corporal by Crown Prince.

[By Cable to The Chicago Tribune.]

BORDEAUX, Nov. 7.—The Benjamin of the war is said to be a Servian lad, Dragoljub Jelitich, who, although only 12 years old, has been through seven engagements, in the last of which he was wounded. Crown Prince Alexander of Servia personally handed to the boy his stripes as corporal.

VACATION MEMORIES.

WHEN LENA KISSES IT IS A NOISE LIKE A BAD TIRE.

When Al Heard It It Cracked His Heart, So He Wants a Divorce—Admits He's "Eclipsed."

Jersey City, N. J., Nov. 7.—Albert Steinmetz has sued his wife, Lena, for divorce and in testifying today declared that one night when he had his wife and a man friend out for an automobile ride he heard sounds which made him think "something was wrong with a rear tire."

"I looked around," said Steinmetz, "and it was those two kissing."

After the couple separated in July Mrs. Steinmetz said her husband wrote her saying his "heart was cracked."

"I said to him," declared the wife: "'Al, if you don't come back my heart will break; and remember, Al, a cracked heart can be mended but there is no help for a heart which is broken.'"

Al had instance No. 2. He said that in 1913 they had a party to watch the eclipse of the moon. His wife and a friend were in the back yard, he said.

"They weren't looking at the moon, either," said the husband. "My wife called to me, 'Come on out, Al, look at the eclipse.' 'No, Lena,' I said. 'All I can see is my own eclipse.'"

EAGLE FLIES ACROSS LAKE; SNARED IN STEEL TRAP.

Large Bird, Found Floundering in Water, to Be Added to Cy De Vry's Zoo Family.

Cy De Vry, keeper of the Lincoln park zoo, will receive a new boarder next week in the shape of a large white headed eagle.

Stanley Tamulina, a barber, was walking along the lake shore in Highland Park when he saw a large bird flapping about in the water. He called several companions and together they dragged the eagle to land. They found a steel trap clutched to one of the bird's feet. It probably had been caught in the trap and had flown across the lake with the snare clinging to its talons.

The eagle was placed on exhibition in Leo Haak's butcher shop in Highland Park, and proved such a drawing card that the butcher decided to keep it a week before turning it over to Cy De Vry.

Who Is This Woman? Has Diamond Earrings

About 35 years old, 5 feet tall, weighs about 115 pounds, slim, blonde, blue eyes; wears black turban, black silk jacket over brown silk jacket, black silk waist, brown kid gloves. Black leather pocketbook containing clipping bearing advertisement for seamstress which, followed up, indicated the woman had called on Mrs. J. Raco at 2043 Dayton street, but had found the position advertised filled. Woman wore small pair diamond earrings, two rings, one set with red stone, other with opal, and grapevine brooch. Do you know her?

This unidentified woman was seriously injured by the automobile of Morton D. Hull of 4855 Woodlawn avenue in Michigan avenue, between Fifty-second and Fifty-third streets, yesterday afternoon about 3 o'clock. She was thrown ten feet. Her arm and ankle were broken, and it was feared her skull was fractured. Her body was severely contused and broken.

The automobile was driven by George Thompson of 3637 Rhodes avenue, a chauffeur. The woman was taken unconscious to Washington Park hospital, where small hopes were held of her recovery.

EARTHQUAKE AT MESSINA FOLLOWS VESUVIUS' ACTION.

People Fear That Temblor Will Be First of Long Series of Disturbances.

MESSINA, via Rome, Nov. 7.—A strong earthquake shock which has been felt in this vicinity has caused considerable alarm among the populace, especially as following closely the fresh activity of Mount Vesuvius. Fears are entertained that the new shock is but the forerunner of another period of earthquakes.

According to the registrations at the observatory, the center of today's earthquake was about seventy-seven miles distant from Messina.

Mount Etna Again Active.

CATANIA, Sicily, Nov. 7.—Mount Ætna is showing signs of unrest. Rumblings may be heard in the interior of the volcano, and this is accompanied by the emission of great quantities of smoke. These phenomena are believed to be connected with the earthquake felt near Messina today and the eruption of Mount Vesuvius.

"BABE" GOES TO HOI POLLOI.

Aristocratic Persian Joins Alley Cats and Its Mistress Offers a Reward for Return.

Babe has gone to romp with the alley cats. Ever since it was a small ball of white fuzziness Babe had been in the habit of watching alley cats scoot over back fences and chase sparrows while it was compelled to sit in the steam heated flat of its mistress, Mrs. Celia Carter, at 3757 Indiana avenue, and wish that it had been born just a common cat instead of a thoroughbred white Persian.

But yesterday Mrs. Carter left her back door open and Babe went out to see the world.

"I'll give a reward to any one who brings Babe back," Mrs. Carter said. "I couldn't put a valuation on the cat, because it was a pet. I don't think it was stolen. It just ran away."

MORE CHOLERA IN AUSTRIA.

Dispatches from Venice Say the Scourge Has Spread to Sixty Towns and Villages.

[By Cable to The Chicago Tribune.]

BORDEAUX, Nov. 7.—Dispatches from Venice say that it is now officially declared that cholera exists in over sixty towns and villages in Austria.

INDIAN FORCE TAKES TOWN ON PERSIAN GULF

U. S. PROTEST TO CZAR

BULLETIN.

LONDON, Nov. 8, 12:30 a. m.—The admiralty announces the occupation of Fao, a port of Asiatic Turkey at the mouth of the River Shat-el-Arab, in the Persian gulf.

A military force from India, covered by the sloop Odin, landed with a naval detachment after the Turkish guns had been silenced, according to the announcement.

There were no British casualties.

[By Cable to The Chicago Tribune.]

LONDON, Nov. 7.—A Daily Mail dispatch from Athens says that an American ship which lay within the entrance of the Dardanelles reported to the British admiral on leaving that the forts on both sides had been completely demolished by the bombardment.

LONDON, Nov. 7.—Telegraphing from Amsterdam, the correspondent of Reuter's Telegram company says a message received there from Vienna says that the Austro-Hungarian consul general and the Turkish diplomatic representative at Tabriz, Persia, have been taken prisoners by the Russians and transported to Tiflis.

The Persian government and the American minister at Teheran—John L. Caldwell—have protested to Russia, according to the correspondent, against this alleged infraction of international law.

Russians Active in Black Sea.

Another dispatch to the Reuter Telegram company from Amsterdam brings the following statement by the Turkish army headquarters, received from Constantinople by way of Berlin:

"The Russian army showed no activity on Friday.

"This morning the Russian fleet bombarded the Black sea ports Zunguldiak and Kuzlu for two hours. Four Turkish transports were sunk. At Zunguldiak the French church and the French consulate were destroyed."

Another dispatch received by the Marconi Wireless Telegraph company says:

"In the roads of Smyrna three large English ships and several English and French steamers have been seized."

Confiscate Allies' Steamers.

In a dispatch from Athens, dated yesterday, the correspondent of the Exchange Telegraph company says the authorities of Smyrna, in Asiatic Turkey, have confiscated all the British, Belgian, and Russian steamers lying in the port.

The public treasury has been transferred from Smyrna to the interior, the correspondent continues, and the transmission of cipher messages between neutral consulates and legations has been forbidden by the porte.

Armenians Against Turkey.

PETROGRAD, Nov. 7.—The most significant development to date of the Russo-Turkish war is the announcement that the Armenians are rising against Turkey. Realizing that the present is an opportune time to throw off the Turkish yoke and to get revenge for past outrages, the Armenians are offering their services to the Russian Caucasian army which has invaded Turkey.

The Russian forces have already proceeded westward from Passine, Dedine, and Barazet, where the first actual fighting of the war took place.

Despite the mobility of the advanced columns, which are made up of mounted infantry, cavalry, and auto artillery, progress must be slow because of the nature of the territory to be traversed. The roads are little more than bridle paths and the country is mountainous.

The entire food supply of the army must be transported from the base positions, as it will be impossible for the Russians to "live off the country." This will make a swift march to Constantinople impossible, as there is 700 miles to be covered, 500 of which is absolutely destitute of railroads.

The only thing which can make progress faster will be success for the allied fleet, which is bombarding the Dardanelles. If they can reduce the forts that command the entrance then it may be possible for the fleet to sweep the harbor clear of mines and get through to attack the Turkish fleet.

But until the Turkish fleet is destroyed it will be impossible to ferry Russian troops across the Black sea.

No Anxiety in Petrograd.

There is no feeling of anxiety here, however. It is felt that the Russian fleet can protect the Russian Black sea ports and that the Caucasian army can force its way westward along the south shore of the Black sea toward Constantinople.

Great Britain will have the most serious problem, inasmuch as she must protect Egypt and take steps to prevent any participation by its subjects in the holy war proclaimed by his highness Esaed Effendi, the shiek-ul-Islam, or spiritual head of the Moslem faith.

So far as the Moslem subjects of Russia in Caucasia are concerned, they have already declared that they would refuse to rise to aid Turkey.

The situation in Egypt and India may be different, however, but information available here indicates that the British have sufficient loyal troops in Egypt especially to stop right at the outset any rebellion that might start.

Germans Active in Turkey.

ROME, Nov. 7.—Dispatches from Constantinople describe the situation there as outwardly much as it was during the Balkan war. Foreigners are regarded with suspicion and keep to themselves, except in the case of Germans, who may be seen everywhere. German money is so plentiful that it is often accepted as though it were Turkish.

In the cafés the German language is constantly heard, and this is true also of places of amusement.

The governing classes are described as appearing solemnly confident, but the army is declared to be totally unprepared for war. The storehouses are said to be empty and no commissariate exists. Many soldiers are still wearing the uniforms worn in the last previous war, and the army officers have not all been paid, it is asserted.

Kaiser Sends In Ammunition.

There is a scarcity of ammunition, according to the correspondents, who add that since the beginning of the present war the Germans have been trying to overcome these drawbacks, and to a certain extent have succeeded.

They have poured into Turkey German officers, privates, sailors, arms, and ammunition, and, above all, money. It is also said that they have sent a submarine to Turkey.

Enver Pasha, the Turkish minister of war, and Gen. Liman von Sanders, the German commander of the Ottoman army, are the idols of the moment, says one correspondent, who adds:

"They have promised the people military glory and certain conquests, followed by riches and prosperity through the spoils of war. Enver Pasha already is depicted as the Ottoman Napoleon, but meanwhile, notwithstanding Germany's assistance, the financial necessities are so pressing that a new taxation has been imposed, and the salaries of officials, including the diplomats, have been curtailed."

PROTEST FOR GERMAN ALLIES.

Washington, D. C., Nov. 6.—If the report from Vienna that the American minister at Teheran has protested to Russia against the alleged arrest of representatives of Austria-Hungary and Turkey at Tabriz, Persia, is correct, Mr. Caldwell undoubtedly acted in his capacity as the temporary custodian of the affairs of those countries in Persia. It is highly improbable that he made any move in the name of the American government.

It is not clear that the American minister has been entrusted with any responsibility by the belligerents in Persia, but it is conceivable that a situation has arisen to make this possible.

BIG FOOD CARGO ON WAY FOR RELIEF OF BELGIANS.

LONDON, Nov. 7.—The steamer Jan-Block, laden with 2,000 tons of supplies for the relief of Belgians, which were purchased by the American relief commission, sailed from London today for Rotterdam. Tomorrow the steamer Tellus will depart with 1,700 tons of wheat.

Herbert C. Hoover, chairman of the American commission, has received a report from Ald. Jacomain Maes describing how the relief work is carried on in Brussels.

The city has been divided into twenty-one districts, in each of which a local committee arranges for the distribution of supplies. Bread and soup are delivered to these committees before 10 o'clock every morning from a central kitchen, where thirty-six cooks and fifty assistants begin preparing the soup at 2:30 a. m.

AUSTRIAN STATEMENT TELLS OF SUCCESS OVER SERVIANS.

Official Report Says Progress Is Being Made Against Enemy Which Is Strongly Intrenched.

LONDON, Nov. 7.—An official statement issued in Vienna and reaching here by way of Amsterdam, says:

"On the 7th, in the southern war theater, attacks made against the enemy, strongly fortified behind barbed wire entanglements in the district of Compianie and south of Shabats, are progressing slowly. The strategically important heights of Misar were captured and 200 prisoners taken.

"Together with these operations we began yesterday an attack on the position near Kroupani, sixty-two miles southwest of Belgrade. The details cannot yet be published. Yesterday some Servian intrenchments were stormed and 15,000 prisoners, four cannon, and six machine guns were taken."

GERMANS DRESS AS WOMEN.

Kaiser's Troopers Disguise Themselves, but French Discover Ruse and Open Fire.

PARIS, Nov. 7.—One of the latest of the German ruses is to disguise themselves as women, according to semi-official information given out in Paris today. In this garb German soldiers recently went out to gather potatoes in a field near Senones, while in the neighborhood of Trois Maisons a German convoy was observed apparently escorted by a group of women. In both cases the fraud was discovered by the French troops, who opened fire. The disguised soldiers ran and under their skirts appeared the boots of cavalrymen.

ALLIES REPULSE VIOLENT ATTACKS ON WHOLE LINE

Germans Make Repeated Attempts to Drive Their Way Farther Into France.

PARIS, Nov. 7.—Violent night and day attacks by the Germans on the Anglo-French front southeast of Ypres and on the British line at Nieu Chapelle, between the canal of La Bassee and Arras, and against the British positions on the Oise have been repulsed with heavy losses to the enemy.

The French official statement issued tonight declares that not only are the allies holding their own at every point, but that at certain positions they are pressing forward.

The situation along the Yser is described as comparatively calm. The French, it is announced, have occupied Haucourt and Hogeville.

In opposition to these claims the official statement in Berlin says the Germans are gaining ground slowly in the face of tremendous opposition. The most noticeable gains are declared to be in the neighborhood of the Meuse.

French Official Statement.

"On our left wing the situation is relatively quiet on the Yser downstream from Dixmude. The Belgian troops, who advanced along the right bank of the Yser from Nieuport in the direction of Lombaertzyde, and who had been counter-attacked by the Germans, were sustained in time. The situation has been entirely reëstablished in this locality.

"At Dixmude the marines repulsed a fresh counter-offensive movement. Further to the south the attacks of the enemy around Bixschovote were repulsed by French troops, who subsequently advanced. To the east of Ypres the situation is without change.

"To the southeast of this town we have resumed the offensive, in combination with the British troops operating in this region, and repulsed an attack particularly violent and pronounced by detachments belonging to the active army corps recently brought into this region by the Germans.

British Stop Violent Attack.

"Between Armentieres and the canal of La Bassee the British army repulsed a violent attack of Nieu Chapelle. Between the canal of La Bassee and Arras, as well as between Arras and the Oise, several counter attacks, delivered by night and by day, have been checked. We even made some slight progress in the region of Vermelles and to the south of Aix-Noulette.

"On the center, in the region of Vailly, we continued to recapture ground previously lost by us.

"In the Argonne fresh attacks on the part of the enemy were repulsed, and at the end of the day our troops made progress at several points.

"To the northeast of Verdun we have taken possession of the villages of Haucourt and of Nogeville.

"In the wooded region along the heights of the Meuse, southeast of Verdun, and in the forest of Apremont, southeast of Mihiel, the offensive movements of the enemy failed. Some trenches in the vicinity of St. Remi were carried by our troops.

"The attacks of the Germans on the advanced positions of the Grande Couronne of Nancy (the circle of fortified positions surrounding Nancy) resulted in perceptible losses for the enemy. A surprise attack undertaken by the enemy against the heights which dominate Mount Sainte Marie, resulted in complete failure."

Kansas at the Front.

LONDON, Nov. 7.—The correspondent of the Express on the Belgian frontier, under date of Friday, telegraphs the following:

"The kaiser himself is close to the front in Flanders, making efforts to inspire his troops to gain Calais.

"Despite the nearly successful bomb attack on him at Thielt on Sunday, the kaiser continues to drive daily through the territory behind the Bruges and Courtrai roads.

"Daily he singles out certain soldiers for acts of exceptional bravery, and personally gives them the iron cross. He visits the field hospitals and talks to the wounded, invariably saying: 'Good day, comrade. The kaiser wishes you a speedy recovery.'"

Roulers Burned in Revenge.

ROULERS, Belgium, Nov. 7.—This city, which is the headquarters of the German staff during the attack on Ypres, has suffered terribly. "It has been bombarded twice and was partly destroyed by an incendiary fire after the Germans had accused citizens of shooting at German soldiers and in retaliation had burned down a large district occupied by the working classes. The Belgians, however, contend that French cavalry was responsible for the shooting.

It is reported that forty-three citizens have been shot by the Germans, while a fine of $25,000 was levied upon the town. Later this fine was doubled, and the money to pay it was collected by the daughters of a number of prominent citizens, who in a house to house canvass were able to raise the amount in cash.

The city is now under strict military law, and the mayor and six leading citizens are obliged to reside in the town hall as hostages. Since Nov. 4 no one has been allowed to leave the northern part of Belgium.

FOUR SAILORS LOSE CASE AGAINST THEATER MEN.

Attendants of N. Y. House Testify Men Were Denied Admission Because of Actions, Not Uniforms.

New York, Nov. 7.—The four United States sailors who were denied admission on Sept. 16, while they were in uniform, to an uptown theater, were not discriminated against because of their uniforms, in the opinion of Police Court Magistrate Herbert, who today heard the testimony in the case against three theater attendants.

The employés at the theater testified that one of the four sailors annoyed a woman in the lobby and that another one walked "in a wobbly way."

The money for the tickets which the sailors had purchased was handed back to them. The three attendants were discharged.

RUSSIANS AGAIN THREATENING TO INVADE GERMANY

Czar's Armies Have Advanced Almost to Frontier; Also Near Cracow.

PETROGRAD, Nov. 7.—The Russian armies again are in position to threaten Germany with invasion. Official accounts agree that the general advance against Berlin, halted when the Germans invaded Russian Poland in force, now has been resumed.

The Russian right wing is across the East Prussian frontier and is pushing the Germans back in the region of the forest of Rominten and Lyck. The German rear guard was dislodged from Mlawa on Nov. 4 with heavy losses. The objective of the Russians again is the fortress of Koenigsberg.

It is stated at the war office that an attack in force is now in progress against the Germans who are holding Wirballen, the last position of consequence retained by them in Russian Poland. Already the Russians are declared to have made substantial gains.

Germans Stand on Frontier.

The Russian central army, which defeated the Germans in front of Warsaw, is keeping up its westerly movement. The German fortified position at Sieradz, on the Warthe river in Russian Poland and about fifteen miles east of the German border southeast of Kalisz, is being attacked.

This engagement marks the beginning of the Russian advance against the last strong German position on Russian soil and a great battle here is expected.

It is reported that a German column yesterday passed through Czenstochowa, Russian Poland, moving west. This city recently was the headquarters of the German staff in the campaign against Warsaw.

Austrians Retreat on Cracow.

The left wing of the Russian armies has defeated the Austro-German forces all along the line of the San river in Galicia with the exception of a small section around Przemysl, which has been screened. The Austrians are falling back on Cracow, in which vicinity in engagements between Oct. 23 and Nov. 4 the Russians took prisoner 274 officers and 18,500 men, three howitzers, forty other pieces of artillery, thirty-eight rapid fire guns, and a large quantity of munitions of war.

Tonight the minister of war declared that by the middle of next week there would not be a single German remaining on Russian soil.

War Office Recites Progress.

The situation as described at the war office tonight is about as follows:

"The Russian right wing, which has crossed the northerly East Prussian border, is moving in the general direction of Königsberg. It is slowly pushing the Germans back. Swift progress is impossible because of the necessity for bringing up our transport, the Germans having thoroughly stripped the country and burned all bridges in their retreat.

"The Russian central armies, under the immediate command of the Grand Duke Nicholas, are moving westward against the Silesian and the Posen barrier forts. The right center has invaded East Prussia from the south to coöperate with the right wing commanded by Gen. Rennenkampf.

Russians Envelope Przemysl.

"The Russian left continues its movement westward from the San river with Cracow as the object of attack. An enveloping force has been left around Przemysl, where the Austrian garrison is making a stubborn resistance. Part of the Austro-German forces have already refuged in Cracow and heavy earthworks have been thrown up along the banks of the Donajec river, where the next stand of the enemy is expected to be made.

"A strong Russian cavalry column is moving west along the foothills of the Carpathians ready to prevent any flanking movement by the Hungarians through the passes of the mountains."

Detailed Russian Statement.

An official statement covering the fighting for the last month was given out today by the Russian general staff, as follows:

"At the beginning of October our troops were engaged along a front extending for 330 miles and passing through Warsaw, Kozienica, Przemysl, and Czernowitz. Toward Oct. 20 we succeeded in gaining a decisive success over the Germans on the right bank of the Vistula, in the region of Warsaw—that is to say, on the right wing of our general strategic front.

"Our next object was to strike from the north those portions of the enemy's forces still holding positions on the Vistula and the San.

Resistance Broken in Galicia.

"In the fighting, which lasted from Oct. 23 to 27, we succeeded in breaking the stubborn resistance of the Austro-German army in the Kozienica-Ivangorod region. In danger of being turned beyond Pilitza, this army fell back, pursued by our troops.

"Between Oct. 28 and Nov. 2 we overcame the enemy's resistance in a new region, that of Alexandria and Sandomir.

"Fierce combats on the river San and south of Przemysl, which have been going on for more than three weeks, resulted on Nov. 5 in a general retreat of the Austrians.

"On the preceding night the Austrians made a last effort to repulse our troops, who were crossing the San. Until a late hour the enemy attacked on an extended front, taking the offensive in dense, successive lines, but everywhere they suffered enormous losses and were repulsed.

"On Nov. 5 the enemy's columns commenced to move from the San in the direction of Dukla pass, across the Carpathians and south of Przemysl, seeking everywhere to leave the battle front.

Germans Hold Warthe River.

BERLIN, Nov. 7.—The following official communication was given out at German army headquarters this afternoon:

"In the eastern arena of the war three divisions of Russian cavalry which crossed the river Warthe above Kolo were defeated and pushed back across the stream."

BRITAIN FREES AMERICAN SHIP

CARGO TO TRIAL COURT.

Washington, D. C., Nov. 7.—The American steamer Kroonland has been released by British officers at Gibraltar and will sail today, leaving the copper and rubber of its cargo for a verdict of a prize court.

United States officials await with great interest the ruling of the prize court. A statement given out by the British embassy declares that Great Britain felt compelled "to stop contraband trade in copper with Germany through Italy" because it had been learned such shipments actually were intended for German gun and ammunition factories.

It was added, however, that shipments made prior to Oct. 29, when copper was made absolute contraband of war on the British list, and held by British authorities, would be certain of a market, as the government was prepared "to arrange for the purchase of copper detained by them." Presumably the Kroonland's copper cargo would fall within this provision.

GERMAN MAIL BOAT COMING.

U. S. Postal Authorities Announce Steamer Direct from Germany Is Nearing Virginia Capes.

Norfolk, Va., Nov. 7.—United States postal authorities announced tonight that a German steamer carrying between 4,000 and 6,000 sacks of mail direct from Germany is nearing the Virginia capes and is expected to dock at Newport News tomorrow. An extra force of mail clerks is held ready to handle the mail. The authorities refuse to give the name of the steamer.

'TRIBUNE' MAN'S FILMS PORTRAY FURY OF BATTLE

Censors Praise Weigle Pictures of Shell Fire and Fighting in Trenches.

"They are grand pictures, the only real war pictures shown so far. The others, exploited as authentic, simply have been maneuvers, and were turned down."—Maj. Funkhouser, board of censors.

"They are the real war pictures."—Theodore Phillip, also of the board of censors.

Mr. Weigle's films will be shown, beginning Monday, Nov. 16, at the Studebaker theater, where hey will be seen exclusively for one week. "The Tribune" was given the exclusive right by the Belgian government to take battle pictures, half the proceeds derived from the reproduction of which are to go toward Belgian Red Cross work.

What war actually is was shown to a small group of persons yesterday in the rooms of Maj. M. L. C. Funkhouser in the city hall. The motion pictures of war scenes in Belgium taken by Edwin F. Weigle, TRIBUNE staff photographer, were shown to the moving picture censors.

Practically every phase of fighting is depicted. There are pictures of infantry in action; of the artillery fire; of soldiers falling and comrades pulling them from the trenches; and of Red Cross workers helping the wounded, Belgian and German alike, after the battle. Also there are refugees, thousands of them, ever present, hurrying from the advancing Germans, and then miles of ruined cities and villages and shell furrowed roads.

War's Weapons Shown.

Most of the weapons of warfare are shown. An armored motor car is pictured covering a Belgian retreat. Then there are machine guns drawn by dogs, ammunition wagons, ambulances, priests and nuns helping the wounded, and soldiers digging trenches with their little square shovels in fields of beets and cabbages.

Burning cities, broken and ruined bridges, soldiers and citizens lying dead, side by side, also have been caught on Mr. Weigle's film.

Probably the most dramatic picture is the explosion of a shell, tearing to pieces a house just back of the firing line near Termonde. The soldiers are first seen in a field near the house. Another house is burning, after having been struck by a shell. The ruined roof is plainly visible.

Belgians Open Fire.

The Belgian soldiers fire at the unseen Germans and advance. Just as they pass out of the vision of the motion picture camera a mass of smoke shows about the houses. Simultaneously the stone and bricks and tiles of a house are seen flying up into the air. The shell starts this house burning also.

The censors were delighted with the pictures.

"It's a grand picture," said Maj. Funkhouser at the close of the exhibition. "They are the only real war pictures shown so far. The others have been simply maneuvers which have been exploited as authentic war pictures and all of them were turned down."

"They are the first real war pictures," said Theodore Phillip, one of the censors. Mr. Phillip was formerly on the staff of a German newspaper.

4,500 Feet of Film.

The film is called "On Belgian Battlefields." There are 4,500 feet of film, divided into four reels. The pictures show the battles of Alost, of Lierre, of Aerschot, of Malines, and the fall of Antwerp.

THE TRIBUNE was given the exclusive right by the Belgian government to take moving pictures in the Belgian war zone. Half of the proceeds from the pictures will be turned over to the Belgian government for Red Cross work, in accordance with the contract made between Belgium and THE TRIBUNE.

The opening of the film shows a panorama of the city of Antwerp from the tower of the Cathedral of Notre Dame. The first real war shown is on a road near Alost. Wounded soldiers are found along the road, and the TRIBUNE automobile is filled with the wounded, who are hurried to the rear.

Retreating Artillery Comes.

Then comes the artillery, retreating, the horses galloping. Closing up the retreat is an armored motor with several soldiers at a machine gun pointing backward. Later the Belgians receive reinforcements and start back. One of the interesting features of the film is the long row of machine guns pulled by dogs. The tongues of the dogs hang out as they run along the road. Occasionally one stops to snap at his mate, and a soldier at the side strikes them with a stick.

Hurry On to Alost.

In this fight the pictures show the Belgians crossing fields of beets, jumping over trenches abandoned by Germans, running past burning houses, and hurrying on to Alost. At the edge of the town the camera meets hundreds of refugees running from the Germans. There are babies and bundles and two wheeled carts everywhere.

The pictures will be shown for the first time Monday, Nov. 16, at the Studebaker theater, Michigan avenue, between Van Buren and Congress streets. They will run exclusively at the Studebaker for a week.

Theaters desiring to book these films may make application to the Central Film company, 110 South State street, Chicago.

CHICAGO WOMEN PLEDGE WELCOME TO WAR ORPHANS

Praise "Tribune's" Undertaking to Provide Homes for Many Babies.

Will the war orphans of Europe be welcomed in Chicago?

Ask the women of Chicago. Never in history has the parent heart been so wrung as with the stories that have come from over the Atlantic. The cables have told some of the tales, but it has rested with the returned travelers to bring the pathetic, intimate stories of the homeless babes who may be seen wandering over the war waste stretches of Europe, hungry and terror stricken, alone and unknown. The babies are picked up here, there, everywhere, the place of their finding noted on a little tag tied around their necks, and sent on their way to benevolent persons or camps to await a future of which no one knows.

Women City's Leaders.

The situation of taking care of friendless babies is not new to Chicago women. No group of individuals has so wide a reputation for whole hearted helpfulness as the women. They have been the founders and supporters of most of the city's big movements, prompted by motives of humanitarianism and better citizenship.

During the progress of the war abroad they have shown their anxiety to give their aid, but caring for orphans with the sea between has been difficult. The idea of bringing the babies to American mothers for care and training is a step toward solving this situation.

Calls Idea Wonderful.

"What do I think of the idea?" said Mrs. Charles Wouters of 3253 South Michigan boulevard. "It is wonderful." Mrs. Wouters, who is American, is the wife of one of the city's most widely known Belgians, and was one of the women active in the arrangements for the visit of Mme. Vandervelde to Chicago. "I want the people of Chicago to know that Belgium never has known a beggar. Never has there been a Belgian who begged. Give him a spade and a bit of ground and he'll work. O, how he'll work! He never asks for help, not even from his own. Such is the blood which runs in the veins of the war orphans of Belgium.

"One of the agonies of war is the separation of families, but since this emergency must be faced, I am sure America could not do better than to open its arms to these babes who need the help and who are worth helping."

Charity Worker Pleased.

It chances that just at this time Miss Bickell Holmes, for many years associated with the charities of Chicago but of recent years a worker in the east, is in the city.

"The steps being taken by THE TRIBUNE to bring permanent happiness to two nations by bringing the homeless and needy child to the childless home of plenty stirs my soul," Miss Holmes said. "How I wish I could be of service in this great and humane undertaking of THE TRIBUNE! Experience is worth while when something vital is to be done, and I wish it were possible for me to dedicate to this great crisis of the world's history what I have learned in the greatest school of life."

Help from Mrs. Cudahy.

Mrs. Joseph Cudahy said:

"I do not think a place could be found where the idea could find more ready coöperation than in Chicago, whose people always are open and broad minded. Every one is more than willing to help—there is a real anxiety to be of service to the little folks, who are the real sufferers in this war. If they come they will find welcome."

"You know," answered Mrs. William R. Odell, another of the women active in the plans for raising Red Cross and relief funds, "the bigness of the baby idea rather staggered me when I read it. It is quite the greatest thing in the world. The whole situation is so appalling that only a very big scheme can meet it, and if this is possible it will be a wonderful thing to have done. One thing is sure—every one is most anxious to do everything possible to help."

Appeals to All Mothers.

"Every one at our house is most heartily in sympathy with the idea," was Dr. Lena K. Sadler's comment. Dr. Sadler not only is a mother and a physician, but she is the wife of Dr. William S. Sadler, author, physician, and lecturer. The Drs. Sadler from their early days as medical missionaries, through their years of experience, have devoted much of their time to the youth of the country. "It's a splendid idea," Mrs. Sadler continued. "This great war has made people feel the Christian spirit was dragging in the dust. This is not so, and just such big plans as the one THE TRIBUNE has outlined go to prove it still encircles the world. Moreover, it will be a wonderful thing for eugenics. It will bring the babies into good environment and keep alive the stock of the brave men and women who have given their life's blood that the world cannot afford to lose."

From an Ex-Alien.

Likewise there is the comment of a woman physician who has had the experience about to be faced by many of the war orphans—Dr. A. E. Linander. Dr. Linander, who came to America as a young girl, learned our language, and won her professional spurs here, says:

"One thing is true—they could not come to a bigger and kinder country than America. It is the best friend in the world. Some of them will respond to their environment more readily than others. For some the grafting will be easy and for some it will be hard—that is always the case—but there is no greater mother nation in the world for the homeless than America."

"It Is a Noble Plan."

And from Mrs. Caroline K. Sherman, former member of the board of education and widely known clubwoman, there comes:

"It is a noble plan and characteristic of the good work THE TRIBUNE is accustomed to doing. The Belgians are a home loving people and most of the families will choose to go back as soon as it is possible, but these homeless waifs must be taken care of at once and made welcome in the American homes."

BELGIUM'S ENVOY LAUDS "TRIBUNE" PLAN FOR RELIEF

Minister Hopes Many Children Will Be Provided with New Homes and Care.

[BY A STAFF CORRESPONDENT.]

Washington, D. C., Nov. 7.—[Special.]—Mr. E. Havenith, the Belgian minister to the United States, today expressed his appreciation of the suggestion made by THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE for caring for the orphans of Belgium.

Dr. Havenith asked THE TRIBUNE to present him with a statement of the complete details of the plan, that he might forward it to his government.

The Belgian minister was apprised of the plan just before he started for New York, where tomorrow he has a conference with the Belgian relief committee. He said he could not express his appreciation of the sincere interest taken in the welfare of Belgium by the people of this country, and particularly of the interest taken in the unfortunate mothers, widows, and orphans of Belgium's gallant soldier dead.

Views of Belgian Consul.

Dr. Cyrille Vermeren, Belgian consul at Chicago, spent today in Washington conferring with the Belgian minister. Dr. Vermeren said THE TRIBUNE's offer was one of the greatest he has ever heard of.

"It appears to me," he said, "that our first effort should be to take care of all the children we can in Belgium, to preserve them for Belgium. But undoubtedly there will be many, probably thousands of children who will need homes which cannot be provided in Belgium without outside help. If they cannot be cared for in their native country, I know of nothing that would be so fine, so charitable, so Christian-like as to bring them to this country to care for them here.

"That the people of the United States are in hearty sympathy with the movement initiated by THE TRIBUNE is my firm belief. I myself have received offers from many homes to take care of Belgian children. All of these I have investigated and then referred them to the minister here to make such disposition as the government deems proper. The offers have come from fine homes, homes where any child, whether Belgian or American, would be happy. The spirit of the American people has been wonderful. Not only have they offered to care for the orphans in Europe, but they have offered to care for those children whose fathers have returned to fight for their country.

Seek to Keep Children.

"It appears to me at first glance that possibly there might be many legal difficulties. I am sure, however, that all difficulties could be surmounted in facing the actual task of caring for the orphans.

"There are many things to be taken into consideration. Belgium's interests must be thought of. It is essential that the children, in so far as possible, be preserved for Belgium. But if the problem is too great for Belgium, America is the country to solve it."

While Dr. Vermeren was in Washington he reported that in two days over $35,000 has been collected for the Belgian relief fund in Chicago. He said that the success of the effort was largely due to W. J. Chalmers, who heads the committee.

"We plan to charter a ship and send it loaded with supplies direct to Holland," said the consul. "If we don't get enough supplies in Chicago, we are assured of enough from other cities to fill the ship after Chicago has been taken care of."

Chicagoan Offers Foodstuff.

The Belgian legation today received an offer from P. B. Houghton of Chicago of a carload of beans for the relief work. The offer undoubtedly will be accepted.

The Belgian minister has received numerous applications from persons in the United States for children. Other persons have offered to furnish passage for a number of refugees to come to this country in case the United States will waive the restrictions placed on such procedure by the federal immigration laws.

McCutcheon Cites Distress of Orphans in Belgium

JOHN T. McCUTCHEON, cartoonist and war correspondent for THE TRIBUNE, yesterday sketched a vivid word picture of battle swept Belgium. From first hand observation he spoke of the shattered homes, the devastated fields, and the destitute women and children.

Then he said:

"Every one who has seen the conditions in Belgium is struck with the crying need for relief. THE TRIBUNE's plan for caring for the war orphans in the United States is a tremendously good thing. I shall never forget the touching sight of the women and children hurrying away from Louvain; boys and girls who would never see their fathers again and whose mothers could not provide them with the necessities of life.

"There must be thousands of children who were made virtual orphans by the campaign in Belgium. It is the high privilege of Americans to provide for these children. In many instances their mothers would rather part with them than subject their little sons and daughters to the dangers of starvation.

"It is the little girls who probably will suffer most. The cruel philosophy of war demands male children to take the place of their fathers who die on the battlefield. There are already too many women from the martial point of view.

"If the war is ended within a short time Belgium might reëstablish itself in a few years, but its situation is desperate just now. The Germans need all their resources for home consumption, though they are doing as much as they can to alleviate actual hunger. The resources of other European nations are also strained to such a point that substantial relief can only come from a rich country like the United States.

"THE TRIBUNE's plan is a great idea. It will give practical and genuine relief. It will be welcomed by the Belgian peopel. And I don't think any of the American fathers and mothers who adopt these children will ever regret extending this help to a stricken country."

300,000 BABIES ORPHANS OF WAR

Need for American Homes Greatest in History of Strife.

people already weakened by illness dropped and died by the wayside.

Up to the present day most of the other countries at war may be able to take care of their own little ones. But as the war goes on and shifts its field other countries may be ravaged, children of other nationalities may be rendered homeless and fatherless and motherless. It will be the effort of THE TRIBUNE to serve equally the need of all the nations.

No Legal Adoption?

It may be that in many cases a better purpose will be served if the children are not legally adopted by the families into which they are received. One of the most experienced men in the county in all lines of social work has suggested that European war widows, reluctant to give up any of their children for good, might be more than glad to send them to spend two or three years in a good American home or until they are able to establish themselves again in their native land.

This and other suggestions and objections to the plan as outlined are being considered and more are invited.

Splendid Response Made.

Already the response is splendid and inspiring, as indeed, none who know the people of the middle west could doubt it would be. Scores of families have expressed their eagerness to adopt one or more of the war orphans.

The war orphan of Europe is the most pathetic and the most appealing figure in the world. To see that in spite of half a world in arms he gets a fair start in life is a pleasant duty to which in various ways the men and women of the United States have already set their hands.

RUSSIA PLANS WAR LEVY.

Income Tax and Personal Assessment on Men Free from Army Service Proposed.

PETROGRAD, Nov. 7.—The draft of a bill to raise a war levy has been issued by the minister of finance. It proposes a general tax on the incomes of individuals, corporations and companies with an annual revenue of more than $500 and a personal tax on men who are absolved from military service.

The income tax will range from $8 on incomes of between $500 and $550 to $7,000 on incomes of between $95,000 and $100,000. Incomes exceeding $100,000 will pay 8 per cent of their total amount.

Finland and the Cossack provinces are exempted from the personal tax. It is expected that the war levy will produce not less than $42,500,000.

NOBLES AMONG BRITAIN'S DEAD

Latest Casualty List Gives 15 Officers Killed and 60 Hurt in France.

STILL OTHERS MISSING.

LONDON, Nov. 7.—A casualty list, dated Nov. 1 and issued here tonight, gives the names of fifteen officers killed and sixty wounded.

Among the killed are Col. Frederick Walter Kerr of the Gordon Highlanders, third son of the late Admiral Lord Frederick H. Kerr; Lieut. Sir Gilchrist Nevil Ogilvy of the Scots Guards, who married a daughter of the Earl of Elgin, and Lieut. Col. Gordon Chesney Wilson of the Royal Horse guards.

Lieut. Col. Wilson served with distinction in the war in South Africa and was on the staff of Gen. Baden-Powell in the defense of Mafeking. His wife is Lady Sarah Wilson, who was taken prisoner by the Boers outside Mafeking in 1899 and was later exchanged for a Boer prisoner. She is the sixth daughter of the seventh Duke of Marlborough.

Several Noblemen Are Wounded.

In the wounded list occur the names of Lieut. Lord John Woodehouse, heir of the Earl of Kimberley, an officer in the King's Own Royal Norfolk regiment, a member of parliament from mid-Norfolk, and widely known as an international polo player; Lord Blackwood, son of the Earl of Dufferin; Capt. Sir Victor Audley Falconer Mackenzie of the Scots guard, son-in-law of Viscount Knollys, private secretary to King George; Lieut. the Hon. G. E. H. MacDonald of the Scots guard, son of Baron Macdonald, and Lieut. the Hon. D. S. P. Howard of the Third hussars.

Seventeen officers are reported missing including Lieut. the Hon. V. D. Boscawen and Lieut. the Hon. C. Douglas-Pennant, son of Baron Penrhyn, both of the Coldstream guards.

Crown Prince of Saxony Hurt.

Owing to a serious wound in the leg received in action on the battlefield in France, Crown Prince George of Saxony has arrived at the royal castle at Dresden and will take no further part in the campaign, says a dispatch from The Hague to the Exchange Telegraph company.

Crown Prince George is 21 years of age and a lieutenant in the First regiment of Grenadiers. On Sept. 20 he was awarded the iron cross for bravery on the field of action.

FORCE AID OF CIVIL GUARD.

Germans Imprison Belgian Officials Who Refuse to Help Them in Warfare.

THE HAGUE, Nov. 7.—Reports received here from Brussels late tonight declare that Field Marshal von der Goltz, governor of Brussels has demanded that the members of the Brussels civil guard swear not to oppose Germany again and also to permit Germany to use their services in war. Those who refuse are to be jailed.

War Costly to Cotton Growers.

Washington, D. C., Nov. 7.—War's effect on the price of cotton and cottonseed has caused a loss of about $455,000,000 to American cotton farmers this year, it was announced today by the bureau of crop estimates of the department of agriculture.

GUARD BABIES FOR ADOPTION

Both Homes and Orphans Will Be Safeguarded Through Inquiry.

BAR TAINTED INFANTS.

BY DR. W. A. EVANS.

An organization is being perfected to properly care for the sociological aspects of the work for the war orphans. The applications for children are to be turned over to an agency organized to investigate. This organization will investigate the applicants and their homes. No application will be filled unless it has the approval of this organization based upon investigation.

As this work progresses the work of investigation of the children will be undertaken.

On the one hand we will seek to avoid the injustice to the child which would result from placing him in a bad environment. On the other hand, we will seek to avoid the injustice to the family which would result from giving them a weakling child. Such weakness and emaciation as is due to the hardships of an overrun country will not be a bar.

Our people will be glad to feed up the hungry and restore the roses to cheeks paled by want. But they will not be willing to accept the feeble minded, the infected, and the tainted.

We will organize to properly care for the children in transit and to properly distribute them after they have reached their destination.

The building up of the organization is proceeding along these lines. At its head will be men and women whose reputations will guarantee that the work will be as well done as is possible under the existing conditions of great emergency and governmental and family disorganization.

NEED 10,000 ROUNDS FOR INJURY OF ONE SOLDIER.

High War Department Official Describes Safety of Men in Trenches Along the Front.

Washington, D. C., Nov. 7.—A man in a European war trench has less chance of injury than a man concerned in a street brawl with an opponent armed with a cobblestone. Such was the statement tonight of a high war department official, who had it figured out that it takes 10,000 rounds of ammunition to even injure an intrenched soldier.

He ridiculed the war reports counting Europe's dead by hundreds of thousands. He illustrated his argument by pointing out that trenches after which the Europeans have patterned are located south of this city for the inspectio nof the public. These designed primarily for the instruction of the secretary of war are so equipped that it is claimed to be a practical impossibility to injure a man inside them.

DEFEATS AT SEA SHOCK BRITAIN

ALLIES GAIN ON LAND.

BY J. W. T. MASON.
[Former European Manager of United Press].

New York, Nov. 7.—The Japanese and their Anglo-Sudan allies scored the most important success of the week by forcing the capitulation of Tsing-Tau. This victory means the retirement of Germany from the orient, and will greatly increase Japan's prestige in the far east.

There probably will result a permanent commercial loss to Germany, because of the enforced departure of German traders from the Kiau-Chau protectorate. The markets thus opened will go to whatever power can reach them first and is able to duplicate the cheap quality of goods on which German exporters specialized. Readjustments of commercial relations thus are beginning to make their first appearance as a result of the war.

Chilean Battle a Setback.

Admiral von Spee's victory over Admiral Cradock off the Chilean coast is a blow to British naval prestige and may cause temporary demoralization in British South Pacific shipping circles. It has, however, no more influence on the fighting in Europe than the fall of Tsing-Tau.

The German commander demonstrated that he possesses a superior sense of strategy, but while it was his skilled maneuvering that induced the British to accept battle, the victory was won by the heavier armament of the Germans.

British offensive strength in the North sea is not endangered by the result of the Chilean battle. Superiority of metal would tell in a general North sea engagement for England, as it told for Germany in the South Pacific.

Blow for British Pride.

The Berlin report that three German warships bombarded Yarmouth on Tuesday is a further infliction of naval humiliation on England. No serious conclusions can be drawn from it. The British navy certainly is not strong enough to prevent an occasional raid by swift cruisers on the English coast.

The Germans can accomplish nothing effective from a military standpoint by these raids. They can inflict some damage on the seaside resorts and can lower the Englishman's pride in the omnipotence of his navy, but the toll would be heavy if by chance the raiders ran into a British battle fleet of superior numbers.

Germans Checked in Belgium.

The land fighting during the week has resulted in a definite check to the German offensive in western Belgium. The Yser inundation and the effective use of warships against the German flank have forced a change in the German plans. A new campaign seems to have been ordered during the week whereby an attempt will be made to reach the French coast towns from the east. The drive from the north has proved too costly.

The Russian armies have won during the week what is officially described the most important victory of the war. No reason is given for making so sweeping a claim. The Austrians have been driven back some distance in Galicia, but the Germans are holding their positions in Poland.

The capture of Jaroslav last week seems to be the basis of the Russian claim. This fortress, however, was abandoned by the Austrians and occupied by the Russians six weeks ago. Its subsequent recapture by the re-formed Austro-German army is made known for the first time by inference through Russia's second occupation.

WAR HURTS LONDON ACTORS.

Many Persons Who Depend on Amusements for Living Reported in Dire Poverty.

LONDON, Nov. 7.—Many cases of poverty are being reported to relief committees from among the class that depend upon furnishing amusements for their livelihoods. Small part actors, stage hands, and others are threatened with starvation. The war has hit the theaters and theater folk of the United Kingdom a hard blow.

BELGIAN WOMAN IN U. S. PRAISES ORPHAN SCHEME

Says Plan Proposed by "Tribune" Bespeaks Generosity of America.

Minneapolis, Minn., Nov. 7.—[Special.]—Madame Lalla Vandervelde, wife of a Belgian official, at the country home of C. A. Severance, twelve miles from St. Paul, where she is resting after six weeks of hard work in behalf of Belgian relief, last night said that the orphan children of Belgium will appeal to the sympathy of the world when the war has ended and the thousands of homeless boys and girls have to be provided for.

Madame Vandervelde indorsed heartily THE TRIBUNE's European orphan home finding plan and said it is truly reflective of the generosity of the people of the United States which has been so manifest in many ways.

After the war has ended she believes the world will need to open its heart to the homeless children and the beginning of a movement to provide homes for them is a noble work, she said.

Commends Plan Heartily.

"With all my heart I commend the plan," Mme. Vandervelde said. "It speaks again of the generous nature of the people of this great country, of which I have seen so many manifestations in the last few weeks.

"I doubt if the plan to take care of the war orphans can work out to any great extent at this time, because there is a condition of confusion existing, the like of which the world never saw before.

"I mean to say that no one can at this time tell how many orphans there may be in Belgium. Families torn apart are separated and many never again will be reunited. Children do not know if their fathers are dead, wives do not know if their husbands are ever coming back or if they are numbered with the countless thousands in unmarked graves. Thousands and thousands of Belgian families, utterly disrupted by the war, do not know what is to be their ultimate fate.

Should Surmount Difficulties.

"But I am in sympathy with this plan and it bespeaks the noble qualities of the American people. That there may be difficulties and complications at first, in the working out, should not in the least degree deter those who have it in hand from pursuing it vigorously. For the time will come when the war will end, the Belgain people will again take up their residences in their war stricken country, and there will be so many beautiful little children without parents, without homes, without knowledge of what became of father or mother, as will touch the heart of the world.

"Yes, indeed, I heartily indorse the orphan adoption plan. No one in America knows how terrible the conditions really are. There could not possibly be any exaggeration of it. And the most pitiable part of it all is the little children and their distress. The orphan plan is worthy of the great sympathetic heart of America."

Reward of $500 Offered for Detection of Hostile Air Craft in North of Britain.

LONDON, Nov. 7.—Scotland has been placarded with a notice signed by Lieut. Gen. Sir John Spencer Ewart, commanding the Scottish headquarters, offering a reward of $500 for the detection of hostile air craft in Scotland.

The placard says:

"The presence of these air craft has recently been frequently reported. If the reports are true they have probably been operating from a secret base in an unfrequented locality where they have been able to obtain petrol and other supplies. This base is probably in charge of an armed caretaker."

CAROLYN WILSON TAKEN AS SPY; LIFE'S AMBITION

"Tribune" Correspondent Is Held Short Time by Italian Officers.

BY CAROLYN WILSON.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TRIBUNE.]

GENOA, Oct. 17.—At last the long hoped for ambition of my life has been realized. I have been arrested as a spy. At least I like to call it that, though I think I was only a suspect. And all because I was reading papers in the park at Genoa at the unearthly hour of 7 in the morning. I had arrived here at 5:30 on the night train from Rome and as there was absolutely nothing to do, I thought I would see a sunrise, the first in four years. So I went out to the park and bought a half dozen papers, which I proceeded to clip and mark.

Two men came up and sat down and watched me, and as six papers take quite a while to read they had to wait some time. Finally they came up and asked me what I was doing, and, as I wouldn't answer them they each took me by the arm and proceeded to march me up the street. I asked them in French what they wanted, and when they said that they were agents of the police I demanded proofs, which they wouldn't show.

Said She Was a Suspect.

So then I called to a carbiniere, the foe of all "mashers," and expected the two men to vanish immediately. They told him rapidly in Italian that they were agents and that I was a suspect. I had been—horror of horrors—reading newspapers in the park at half past 6 in the morning! So he added himself to our little procession and we went to a local police station, where I proceeded to show my newly decorated passport and my press card and all the private letters which I owned, and they let me go with warnings in place of apologies.

They told me that it was very dangerous in these days, first, that a young woman should sit in the park; second, that she should read papers in said park; third, that she should clip and mark said papers, and fourth, that she should refuse to explain herself at once to agents of the government paid to trace and hunt down such offenders.

Not very exciting after all, was it? But I am on my way back to Paris, and perhaps I can do better before the end of my trip.

The rules for entrance into France have become so strict within the last three days that it would seem that only world famous figures like Jack Johnson or W. J. Bryan could get all the necessary testimonials of identity. I spent my day yesterday running from the French to the American embassies and scooting to photograph galleries to get pictures taken which I had affixed to my passport with enormous gobs of red sealing wax and tied on with pretty blue ribbons.

Then as a tender keepsake I left one picture with the French ambassador. I hope he treasures it carefully. And since I was in the habit of leaving my photographs around I offered one to the American ambassador, but he refused it. And yet they try to say that the American is as gallant as the Frenchman.

The back of my passport, at least, all that isn't covered with my photograph, has testimonials of character and description and signatures of all the members of all the embassies in Rome, I think. I can't tell, however, for the secretaries affect a bank note signature which can never be deciphered. The only words I can make out are two, one French, one English. They are "bon" and "good." Hoping that this complimentary tautology has reference to my character and that the words which I cannot decipher will do nothing to spoil the good impression, I go trustfully forward.

For after all France is the place to be these days. I had thought that there would be a great deal of news in Rome, since there was daily telephonic and telegraphic communication with Berlin and Vienna. There was news, but it was so contradictory, so partisan, so uncertain that it was impossible to cull the facts from it, and one had to wait until the French communiqués came out to learn the truth. For every one feels that the French are making a mighty effort to give the facts, whether they be depressing or encouraging. They are never verbose, and one must learn to read between the lines. But they are truthful.

Believe War Not Far Off.

Since the appointment of the new minister of war, who is a man from Trieste, a man who knows the spirit and conditions of that part of Italian Austria better than any other military authority, the feeling in Rome is that war will not be very long off.

CRUDE DRAWINGS OF COWS GUIDES FOR GERMAN ARMY.

French Discover Scheme by Which Enemy Was Informed of Their Military Secrets.

PARIS, Nov. 7.—Crude drawings of cows of varying proportions, some in attitudes of defense, belligerency, or alarm, and others in grazing positions, were noticed by French officers during the early days of the campaign on the Aisne. The officers are now convinced that the system was used by German scouts to direct the armies that were to follow.

There was a great variety in the sizes of the drawings and in the positions of the heads and other particulars. By comparing notes and dates it was discovered that these crude pictures had an intimate relation with passing events.

The position of the animal's head was made to indicate the direction in which the French troops were to be found, and the size of the animal indicated the importance of the forces. A small cow meants that the route was not strongly guarded; a cow in a position of defense indicated fortifications in the neighborhood, and the size of the animal indicated the strength of the fortifications, and the pose of the head its exact location.

Germans Capture British Royalty.

LONDON, Nov. 7.—Announcement is made that Viscount Henry William Crichton, eldest son of the Earl of Erne and major of the Royal Horse guards, and Lord Hugh Grosvenor, brother of the Duke of Westminster, are prisoners in the hands of the Germans.

Eat Cold Storage Eggs Because:

Hens are now moulting—not laying.

Cold storage eggs are those which have been best taken care of since the time they were laid.

They are the very cream of the egg crop (about 8% of the total), large clean eggs placed in scientifically refrigerated warehouses while still fresh and sound.

It costs as much to store a poor egg as to store a good one, therefore only the best eggs ever go into cold storage. Once there they are well taken care of.

They are not jumbled together with other kinds of food but are kept under absolutely sanitary conditions in rooms containing nothing but eggs.

The temperature in these rooms does not run up and down as in the home refrigerator. It may not vary one-tenth of one degree in weeks. And the temperature fixed is that found by scientists to be proper for preserving eggs in perfect condition.

Now is the time that these choice eggs are being placed on the retail market. They are being sold to grocers at 25c to 27c a dozen, which is much lower than the price last November.

All cold storage eggs are this year's crop. It is not true that eggs are carried in storage indefinitely. Each winter every refrigerating warehouse is completely emptied.

This is what Dr. Mary E. Pennington, Chief of the Food Research Laboratory of the United States Department of Agriculture, has to say as to the best eggs for housewives to buy at this time:

"When the lay falls off in the late summer and autumn and farmers begin to hold eggs for high prices, good stored eggs from early lots are to be preferred to the average market offerings."

Your Taste Will Assure You in an Instant of the Wholesomeness of Every Egg. For the Sake of Pocketbook and Health Demand Cold Storage Eggs.

TSING-TAU'S FALL CELEBRATED BY CROWDS IN TOKIO

Japan to Govern Province and After War May Buy It; Town in Ruins.

TOKIO, Nov. 7.—Tokio today is celebrating the fall of the German fortress at Tsing-Tau, after an actual siege of a few days more than three weeks.

Crowds collected everywhere today and many processions were formed, the enthusiastic people dragging about with them floats decorated with flowers as a symbol of victory. Japanese and British flags are floating everywhere throughout the city.

Vice Minister of the Navy Suzuki, speaking today of the future of Tsing-Tau, said:

"While the European war continues Tsing-Tau will be administered by Japan. At the conclusion of the war Japan will open negotiations with China."

The prisoners, who will number, it is said, between 6,000 and 8,000, will be brought to Japan.

Final Attack in Night.

The final and successful attack on Tsing-Tau began shortly after midnight Friday morning and the first inroad by the allied forces, which was largely instrumental in the fall of the place, was the taking of the middle fort of the first line of defense. This was accomplished by a brilliant charge of infantry and engineers, led by Gen. Yoshimi Yamada.

Simultaneously with the charge of Gen. Yamada others were made, the troops dashing forward with cries of "banzai!" Taitungchen, the fortification on the east, fell at 5:35 in the morning. Chungchiawa was captured soon thereafter with its two heavy cannon.

A detachment of the first line occupied the Iltis, Bismarck, and Moltke forts at 7 in the morning and then the enemy hoisted the white flag on the weather astronomical station adjoining the governor's office. Another white flag was hoisted on the coast forts at the mouth of the Haipo at 7:30 o'clock.

Sends Note of Surrender.

Gov. Meyer-Waldeck, following the hoisting of white flags on the forts, sent an officer with a flag of truce to the Anglo-Japanese lines.

At 4 o'clock this afternoon the Japanese and German officers opened a conference at Moltke barracks, when the formalities of capitulation were concluded.

The Japanese officers pay unstinted tribute to the bravery of the Germans, who fought tenaciously to the last. Unofficial reports are that the Germans blew up what was left of their forts before surrendering and practically the whole town is in ruins. A Japanese torpedo boat flotilla that entered the bay found that nearly all the ships had been destroyed.

Praise Tsing-Tau Victory.

LONDON, Nov. 8.—The following telegrams of felicitation have been exchanged between the British board of admiralty and the Japanese minister of marine:

"The board of admiralty sends its heartiest congratulations to the gallant army and navy of Japan on the prosperous and brilliant issues of the operations which resulted in the fall of Tsing-Tau."

The Japanese minister of marine replied to this:

"I fully share with you in felicitations on the fall of Tsing-Tau. It affords me great pleasure to assure you that the outcome of the efforts of the navy of our ally in coöperation with ours during the investment of Tsing-Tau was splendid."

SAYS GERMANY WANTS ONE FLAG OVER AMERICAS

Prof. Felix von Luschan Asserts Kaiser Respects the Monroe Doctrine.

After having his plans for an anthropological trip to New Zealand shattered, and his days in Australia, where he had gone as a guest of the British Association for the Advancement of Science, made decidedly unpleasant, Prof. Felix von Luschan of the faculty of the University of Berlin left British soil and canceled all arrangements for crossing English trade routes to come to America.

Prof. von Luschan delievered a lecture at the University of Chicago on "The Civilization of the Hittites." He is one of the foremost authorities of Germany on matters in the field of anthropology, and has been sent on field investigations with the personal approval of the kaiser on several occasions.

Germany America's Friend.

Prof. von Luschan is of the opinion that Germany, if not victorious in the present war, will recuperate sufficiently in twenty years again to affect the prestige of the nations now arrayed against her. The German scientist stated that Germany has no designs contrary to the Monroe doctrine and always has been a friend to America. The Germans are such friends of the United States, he said, that they would be pleased to see the whole of Central and South America under the stars and stripes. At present, he said, the German people would like to have Canada under United States rule.

The professor said the universal peace idea is nothing but a dream, and upheld the necessity of militarism on the part of a nation beset by enemies.

Monroe Doctrine Respected.

"I would consider it a very bad step on the part of Germany if she tried to colonize in the western hemisphere," Prof. von Luschan said. "We consider the Monroe doctrine with great respect, and there is no reason why it should be disregarded. There are a great many Germans in Chicago now. They form one of the best elements in your citizenship—I have been told that. The Germans in Argentina are of the same blood and would be no more likely to plan for German colonization than your Chicago German-Americans.

"The Germans would like very much to see all of the western hemisphere under the American flag. I believe this condition eventually will come. Look at Mexico now. It cannot be said it is the source of any pleasure to the United States. Would it not be better for it to be under the stars and stripes? I also would like to see Canada under the American flag.

"Universal Peace" Nonsense.

"Europe never will be united under one flag. It is impossible; the different peoples are altogether too different. The universal peace idea is nonsense. It will not come until our children have wings.

"We have been hearing many arguments in favor of the abolition of militarism. Militarism and competition, or the contrary, make for progress. That is why I say there never will be a united Europe. The trade rivalry between nations is one of the best elements in our international relations. Militarism and competition are good. Although much has been said of German military methods, you never have heard of the German people criticising the big additions to the English navy.

Blames Leopold and Edward.

"In spite of her good intentions, Germany was forced to enter this war by England. The Germans are very bitter against the British. Germany was fully justified in her actions. The real blame for this war rests with King Edward VII. of England and King Leopold II. of Belgium. They negotiated a secret treaty which provided for the admission of British and French troops to the territory of Belgium. The existence of the secret treaty destroyed the Belgians' claims to consideration as a neutral nation.

"Germany did not desire to enter this war. She hoped to join with England in localizing the conflict. She thought the war would be limited to Austria and Servia. Austria was right in her action against Servia. Servia was backed up by Russia, and the contest became a matter of self-preservation for Austria."

Blocked in Australia.

Prof. von Luschan was accompanied by his wife and a number of scientists from German universities on his trip to Australia, after the invitation by the British society. Friends in New Zealand had prepared extensive plans for their entertainment while on anthropological research work on the island, but at the opening of the war they were forbidden to enter the country. The anti-German sentiment was responsible for their quick departure from the country to which they had been invited as guests, according to the professor. Some members of the party attempted to return to Germany via England, but a majority concluded their only hope of ultimate safety was to embark in an American ship and sail for the United States. Prof. von Luschan said he could not bear to go to London, where he would be forced to stand and hear the British, French, and Russian national hymns.

The professor will leave the University of Chicago this week. He will conduct lectures at Harvard and Yale before attempting to return to Germany.

Will your present grand piano at the touch of a button render any desired composition with all the fire and brilliancy and expression of a master pianist?

It can be done!

Your present grand piano—no matter what its make or size—can be turned into a treasure house of music. Can be so equipped that at the touch of a button—without human aid or guidance—it will render music little short of marvelous.

And its appearance will remain the same. We won't mutilate the case or the instrument. As a piano it will retain the identical qualities it possesses today plus the automatic feature.

Melville Clark, inventor of the Apollo, has worked for years to simplify his Solo Apollo and make it possible to install it in any Grand Piano without mutilating the case.

No matter what the make of your Grand Piano—no matter what its size—we can install, without mutilating the case, a practically concealed Electrically Operated Solo Apollo Action that will transform your instrument.

You can have the best musicians of this country at your beck and call. Isn't it worth 25c per day to have, say twelve of the leading musicians of this country ready and willing to play for you at any time? The rendition is perfect. Ten minutes spent in our demonstrating rooms will convince you that the results can hardly be exaggerated.

YANKEE SERVING IN FRENCH ARMY WRITES OF LIFE

[BY CABLE TO THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE.]

PARIS, Nov. 8.—A correspondent serving with the American volunteers in the foreign legion, writing from an unnamed place under date of Nov. 4, says:

"When I wrote on Nov. 2 that the Americans were intact I did not mean that they had not been under fire, as one man belonging to their section, which numbers sixty, was killed and one was wounded by shrapnel. This does not sound like real fighting, but it is a fact that we had two casualties.

"The fact is that it is a war of the trenches now and there is little risk of death unless one ventures out of his vault, which is the proper word for our quarters. They are bomb proof and are covered with the trunks of trees and large branches, with dirt piled on top for the purpose of keeping the water out. In fact, we are groundhogs, venturing forth as necessity compels us, and only then.

Airships Direct Cannon Fire.

"There is danger, especially if the artillery fire, which is most accurate, is being directed at your vicinity. The accuracy of the fire is due to the aeroplanes which are continually above us, disclosing our position in the trenches and noting the effect of the firing.

"This firing goes on all day, now a few hundred feet to the right, now to the left, and then at us or to the rear. It stops at night and everything is quiet except the popping of guns now and then by the sentries. If the firing comes too quickly there is an alarm given immediately and every one bustles forth and awaits the fight, but in the first four days that we were entrenched none occurred.

"It looked like one the third night when we lay out until dawn expecting an attack at any moment. We always have our bayonets fixed during such times, as it has been shown that the Germans always turn when they face steel. This reminds me of the motto I read in the Perignon barracks when we were quartered there. It read: 'A bullet is crazy; a bayonet is sane.'

Rest and Food a Plenty.

"So the days and nights pass. There is little excitement, less danger, and no adventure. We long for a fight. Once we were called out for a fight but were disappointed. Perhaps we were fortunate, as fighting must be different from the groundhog's existence, yet the disappointment was natural, as one hates to be exposed to artillery fire and death and yet be unable to retaliate.

"So much for the war. Now for a few words on the effect of this sort of living on men's physique and sanity. I have read several articles by Robert Blatchford describing the weariness, dirtiness, and wretchedness of men returning from the front. This may be true of men who have been fighting battles lasting for days without cessation, but it is not so of the men in the trenches. We have been four days in the trenches and could remain four times as long and yet come out fresh and fit provided we art not forced to fight continually day and night.

"The food is a revelation to one who has read of hunger among the Germans. Whoever read of soldiers getting bars of chocolate, wine, cognac, and other delicacies? We do. We get sweet coffee, sometimes with milk, and at other times we get tea. We always have excellent meat, potatoes, and rice. Food! Why, one cannot possibly be hungry; in fact, I have not eaten lunch today because I am not hungry, so I am writing this instead.

Pick Greater than Gun.

"The pick and shovel are more prominent than the gun. I have not fired a gun yet; neither have some of the other boys, although the order was given to fire one night at will. We saw no enemy and thought it best to wait until they got closer if they were coming. I have done a good deal of pick and shovel work both when in the trenches and on the firing line and especially when we returned after being relieved. Our company was sent to dig trenches the second day we arrived, and may do so again unless we relieve the soldiers on the front lines when our four days' rest are over.

"None of the boys has heard as yet who won the world's championship. We only know that the Bostons and Athletics fought it out."

Ancient Fortifications at Constantinople.

This ancient fort and battlement, crumbling with age, is one of the fortifications about Constantinople, and is depended on by the Turk to prevent the despised Christians from entering the land of Mohammed. This view is taken from the "Seven Sisters," or Yodi Kulah, looking north. Beyond the tower is the residential district of Constantinople. Russia has already retaliated for Turkey's raid on Russian seaport towns by seizing eight Turkish towns. The czar is determined to teach the Mussulman followers a lesson which all of Europe hopes will mean the end to Turkish rule in Europe.

RED CROSS FUND NEAR $100,000

Chicago Workers Hope to Get Needed $8,000 by Thursday.

FIRM OFFERS PLANT.

If you wish to contribute to the Red Cross fund, send all cash and make all checks payable to Orson Smith, treasurer, at the Merchants' Loan and Trust company bank, 112 West Adams street. For information call John J. O'Connor, executive secretary, 715 Marquette building. Telephone Central 906.

Only $8,000 is needed to bring Chicago's contributions to the Red Cross fund up to $100,000 and the members of the organization hope they can announce the fund complete at the meeting on Thursday. The committee of fifty-eight business men who are managing the collection of the fund believe they will be able to reach this mark before the meeting.

The cash on hand yesterday totaled $88,357.04, and enough has been pledged to bring this figure up to about $92,000.

A special donation of $10,000 is needed to supply bandages and clothing for the wounded and the women and children in the stricken countries. John J. O'Connor, director of the Chicago division of the organization, announced he did not have authority to use any of the money contributed for purchasing materials unless the donator so stipulated. Ten thousand dollars' worth of materials could be made up into bandages and hospital garments without cost if supplied immediately.

The wholesale tailoring firm of Ed V. Price & Co. offered the use of their building, power for the machines, light, and heat, free and their employés, numbering 1,500, have offered to do the work without charge. The firm's letter in part reads:

"On account of general business conditions we are unable to work our force full time. We have 1,500 employés, a vast majority of whom have relatives in the European war. A large number of them are anxious to donate their services in making many items of clothing and hospital supplies on exhibition in the Red Cross stations in the loop department stores. We have had our superintendent and foremen see these articles, and they report that we can make them. We are perfectly willing to donate heat, light, power, and machines for our employés to do this work if the Red Cross can furnish the material."

Hopes for $10,000 Gift.

"I hope that some generous person will give us $10,000 to buy this material," said Mr. O'Connor. "It is a great opportunity to do good in the most practical and quickest way. We are cabling the money for the war relief fund at once, together with the special funds. More than seventy-five carloads of goods have been sent from Chicago in the last few days. Twenty-five thousand dollars has been cabled to the American hospital in Paris, and a like amount to the American hospital in London."

The Chicago Woman's club, which has a membership of 1,200, is making garments every day. It purchases its own materials as well as furnishing goods for hundreds of other women willing to sew for the cause. An organization of north side women led by Mrs. A. A. Small, some of whom have as many as sixteen women working for them, is doing similar work.

A number of other organizations are planning or already have begun work.

PLANS TO SETTLE GRIDIRON TITLE AND AID BELGIANS

Urbana, Ill., Nov. 7.—[Special.]—A great post-season football game between the eastern and western champions for the benefit of the Belgian refugees, to be played in the largest stadium in the United States, is the plan of President James of the University of Illinois.

That the proposed battle would result in a sum of $300,000 or more is the belief of the president, who is at work securing the consent of the western conference to the plan.

The battle would be between either Illinois, Chicago, or Wisconsin, the teams in the western semi-finals, and Harvard, Yale, or Princeton.

The western conference has a rule against post-season combats, but under the circumstances it is believed the rule will be waived.

Proposed Date Is Nov. 28.

As soon as the conference consent is secured communication will be opened with the east, where post-season games are not forbidden.

The proposed date of the game is on Nov. 28, a week after the closing of the season for the conference teams, and also for the eastern leaders.

"The largest stadium in the country" is taken to mean the one at Yale, seating 60,000 persons. The receipts would be administered by a Red Cross committee.

President James is certain that there is not the slighest hint of a violation of United States neutrality by the proposition. Even the federal government has an agent appointed to assist the Belgian refugees, and Germany has notified this country that food may be shipped to them.

Athletic Leaders Favor Plan.

Two of the biggest conference leaders in the west are strongly in favor of the plan—George Huff of Illinois and A. A. Stagg of Chicago.

"It's a great idea," Mr. Stagg wired.

President James today addressed telegrams to all the presidents of the "big nine" schools as follows:

"Would you favor a post-season game between the winning team in the present conference series of football games and the winning team of the Princeton-Harvard-Yale series in the largest stadium in the country, Nov. 28, for the benefit of the Belgian refugees, to be administered by the Red Cross or some other agency to be agreed on? The special consent of the conference colleges will be necessary for the game."

President James is anxious for the success of the plan. He believes it is the best way the American colleges can show their sympathy. With seats selling from $2 to $5 the financial return would be great.

Plan's Success Arrests with East.

Sponsored by President James and his colleagues, it is believed the proposition will carry through, as far as the west is concerned, and then it will be up to the east. The eastern teams may hesitate at prolonging the season, but the idea is so big that Dr. James believes it will be approved.

The plan is to have the stadium selected and machinery for distributing tickets all ready. As soon as the winners are known on Nov. 21 they will be given instructions. The championship teams will be paid only their expenses, the rest going to the Red Cross.

President James is eagerly awaiting responses from his colleagues. He has asked immediate action. It is believed that by the first of next week the proposition will be in such shape that it can be submitted to Harvard, Yale, and Princeton.

Dr. James of Illinois Favors Football Game.

We are in the presence of a great catastrophe, in the midst of a world war more resembling a convulsion of nature—like an eruption of Vesuvius, of Ætna, or Krakatoa, or an inundation as sometimes sweeps over the valley of the Amazon, or the Mississippi or the Yangste-Kiang—than a mere human phenomenon, an outburst of mere human energy dictated whether by foresight or shortsightedness by wisdom or folly.

As an incident of this war a whole nation has suddenly been struck by the horrors of invasion and defeat and tens of thousands of its members are on the verge of perishing from hunger and cold. It is not ours to determine who is at fault or to attempt the distribution of blame in the face of this awful misery; it is ours only to help and to help quickly.

Nor should it be left only to great philanthropic organizations like the Rockefeller foundation to furnish relief, necessary as their aid is. All classes of our people should assist and we should use every legitimate means of calling public attention to the awful catastrophe and the pressing need of succor.

A post-season football game between the champion teams of the west and the east for the benefit of the Belgian relief fund would attract nation wide attention, not merely to the game, but to the cause which is to benefit by its financial proceeds. It is surely worth our while to turn aside for a moment from our daily tasks in order to further a cause so good, even if we have to run the risk of sacrificing some other things of value.

BRITISH VICE CONSUL HAS BOER CLERK ARRESTED.

J. P. A. Dempers Will Be Held for Deportation—Says He Has $340 Coming to Him.

J. P. A. Dempers, a Boer, was arrested yesterday in the British consulate, in the Pullman building, at the request of L. E. Bernays, vice consul, and taken to the detention hospital to await deportation to England.

"I had a civil service job in the Transvaal, but lost it when the war with England started," he told the police. "I went to London. I saw a newspaper article stating that the German kaiser could give the English plans by which to defeat the Boers.

"I wrote the kaiser four times asking him to help me get back my job, but I got no reply. Then I went to The Hague and asked the consul there to help me. He had me arrested. I was deported to England and was sent to an insane asylum.

"When I got out I went to New York. I was arrested in the British consulate there and sent back to England, but I was declared sane. The New York consul took $340 from me and when I came to Chicago last January I wrote four letters to Ambassador Sir Cecil Spring-Rice at Washington asking for my money and telling him I would call at the Chicago consulate for it. I went there this morning to get the money, but I did not get it."

Attaches of the local consulate denied any knowledge of the money.

GREAT BRITAIN'S WEAKEST POINT IS SUEZ CANAL

Lacks Sufficient Defenses to Protect It from Turks, Says Ex-Attache.

BY EX-ATTACHE.

[Copyright: 1914: By the Brentwood Co.]

With the proclamation by England of martial law in Egypt and the appointment of Lieut. Gen. Sir John Maxwell to supreme military command of the land of the Nile, with the bombardment of Akabah by the English cruiser Minerva, and the announcement that a force of 15,000 Turks, largely officered by Germans, have crossed the khedivial frontier, the attention of the world has been drawn to what is undoubtedly the most vulnerable point of the huge British empire.

Attack on Canal Planned.

That the move of the Turks and their German friends and allies upon the Suez canal is of a very serious character it would be idle to deny. There is abundant evidence from all parts of the world to indicate that Germany had long been preparing for the present fray, and that she had quite made up her mind to precipitate it in last July and August instead of waiting for next year. Whatever else may be said about the Germans, it is impossible to refrain from admiring the marvelous manner in which they had planned out everything beforehand, down to the minutest detail.

Naturally their plan of campaign included a Turkish attack upon the Suez canal, from Syria, and the matter had been provided for so long in advance that it may be safely taken for granted that the Ottoman invading force is composed of picked men, officered by Germans who know every inch of the ground to be covered, and the lay of the land.

It is asserted in the dispatches that the invading army consists of 15 000 men. But this is mere speculation. For it is known that the porte has been for some time past mobilizing troops in Syria, and that it has considerably over 150.000 men under arms there for service against Egypt.

Boundary East of Canal.

Most people seem to be in ignorance as to the exact locality of the dividing line between Asia and Africa—that is to say, between Egypt and Turkey. There are many who are under the impression that it is the Suez canal itself that constitutes the boundary. The fact of the matter is that the frontier is about 150 miles to the east of the canal, running from El Rafa, on the Mediterranean coast, in a straight line to Akabah, at the head of the Gulf of Akabah.

This broad tract of territory tapers off in the south to the extreme point of the Peninsula of Sinai—at the point where the Gulf of Suez and the Gulf of Akabah join the Red sea. The southern portion—that is to say, the Peninsula of Sinai—consists of altogether barren mountains.

Khedive Ranked as Governor.

It has frequently been urged that steps be taken to put this province of El Arish, comprising the desert of Tih and the peninsula of Sinai, in a state of proper defense against any Turkish invasion from Syria, in order to protect the canal from hostile injury.

But there has been a difficulty about this. For Egypt has been until now theoretically a dependency of the Ottoman empire, the ruler thereof, namely, the khedive, ranking at Stamboul as an hereditary governor, inferior in grade and importance to the grand vizier, and to the grand eunuch of the seraglio.

The khedive himself has always been extremely Turkophile, preferring to lean toward the sublime porte rather than towards the English, whom he has hated, while there is a very important and influential pro-Turkish party in Egypt consisting of what may be described as the nobles and the territorial magnates of the country.

Inasmuch as Egyptian money would have had to be employed to construct fortifications and defenses on Egyptian territory, the khedive, his family, and the upper classes would have naturally raised obstacles to the expenditure of the revenues of the nation upon defenses aimed against Turkey.

Desert of Tih Not Mentioned.

When Tewfik succeeded Ismail as khedive in 1879 no mention was made in the Turkish firman of his investiture, of the status of the desert of Tih, and of the peninsula of Sinai. The khediviate on that occasion was simply described as "Tel qu'il se trouve formé par ses anciennes limites." As this was held to be sufficiently vague to cover the status quo, it was accepted by Egypt.

When, however, the present khedive succeeded his father in 1892 the terms of the firman of investiture were made more specific. The "anciennes limites" were declared to be those "indignées dans le firman imperial en date du 2 Revi-ul-Akhir 1257 A. H. (June 1, 1841) ainsi que sur la carte annexé eau dit firman." Realizing that this definition meant the retrocession to Turkey of the whole of the peninsula south of El Arish-Suez line, Great Britain protested, and it was in consequence of this protest of Lord Cromer's that the imperial Turkish irade of April 8, 1892, was issued.

Declares Akabah Reannexed.

This irade declares that "Akabah has been reannexed," but grants to the new khedive the "administration" of the "presque-Ile de Sinai de la meme maniere qu'elle etait administree du temps de votre Grandpere Ismail Pasha et de votre Pere Mehemet Tewfik Pasha."

Lord Cromer chose to interpret this as laying down a boundary line "running in a southeasterly direction from a point a short distance to the east of El Arish to the head of the Gulf of Akabah."

Now, there is no definite authority for this interpretation by Lord Cromer, in the document. Moreover, Lord Cromer cut the ground from beneath his own feet by his further statement that Great Britain consented to the definition of boundaries contained in the present firman, as supplemented, amended, and explained by the irade of his highness the grand vizier. Thus, Lord Cromer actually accepted the firman which declared the "anciennes limites" to be those of the map of 1841, and also agreed to the concession of the Sinai peninsula on terms that were obviously temporary and purely administrative.

Shows Britain's Position.

If I recite all this it is in order to show how very difficult and delicate the position of Great Britain has been with regard to the eastern boundary of Egypt and how difficult it would have been for her to erect any line of defenses there against an invasion on the part of Turkey.

In the Arabi rebellion of 1882, which was brought to a close by the bombardment of Alexandria and by the English victory at Tel-el-Kebir, the insurgents were persuaded to refrain from injuring the canal in any way by the persuasion of old Ferdinand de Lesseps.

England never gave sufficient credit to De Lesseps for his services in this connection and chose to regard the canal as adequately protected by its warships. This is a mistake. To put waterways such as the Suez canal, or that of Panama, out of business requires only the sinking of a few ships or the blowing up of the banks.

It is doubtful, indeed, whether all the men of war that England could spare would be adequate to prevent its partial destruction by a force of several thousand picked Turkish troops.

PANAMA CANAL OPENING SEEN AS BOON TO CHICAGO.

Federal Official Predicts Increase of Business in Marine Department of the Local Custom House.

A big increase in the business of the marine department of the Chicago custom house as a direct result of the opening of the Panama canal was predicted yesterday by J. C. Grant, a member of the efficiency board recently appointed by Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo.

Mr. Grant and John F. McConnochie and N. S. Farley, also members of the board, conferred with Rivers McNeill, collector of customs. The purpose of their visit is to investigate methods in the marine department of the Chicago office with a view to increasing efficiency.

The members of the board came here from New Orleans and will visit a number of other ports where marine departments are a part of the customs service.

INDIA LOYAL TO BRITAIN IN WAR DESPITE FEARS

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TRIBUNE.]

ALLAHABAD, India, Oct. 2.—In view of the many evidences of political unrest in India in recent years it has been freely predicted that once England were engaged in a general European conflict her great Asian empire would make a bold stroke to secure its independence.

The active propaganda of Indian extremists, conducted from the various centers in France, Switzerland, and the United States, has created an impression that India is on the verge of a great revolt and ready to begin a struggle for her freedom at the earliest opportune moment.

The attempted assassination of the viceroy in Delhi in December, 1913, and the subsequent "Delhi conspiracy case" trial which still drags on, with its revelations of organised groups of seditionists in various cities who had embarked on a course of political assassination "in order to waken the masses who are wrapped in sleep to a strong desire for open revolution"; the remarkable outburst of national spirit which followed the repressive measures against Indians in South Africa, and the frank expression of resentment at Canada's refusal to admit Hindu immigrants—these and many other significant events have shown in varying manner and degree the working of a consciousness of Indian national dignity so strong that it contains possibilities fraught with the most farreaching consequences for the British empire.

Wants Home Rule Only?

Widespread restlessness and discontent there may be among the 315,000,000 that make up India's population, but the violent preachments of educated Indians domiciled abroad scarcely represent the true nature of the opposition to British rule in India or the aims of the most influential Indian leaders. The goal of the national movement, as freely expressed for years from platform and press by the men who command the widest respect, is self-government within the empire. India wants the same privileges that are enjoyed by the autonomous dominions of Great Britain; at the present time the great portion of her citizens appear to be looking no further.

Thus instead of there being any wild outbreak of rebellion in the hour of Britain's trial in the west there has been a noteworthy demonstration of loyalty throughout the peninsula. "Britain's war is our war" is the cry that has echoed from the huge massmeetings that have been held in every important town and city in the course of the last week. Instead of the war's being a signal for chaos, it appears to be regarded as an opportunity for India to show that she is worthy of the place in the empire that she has been demanding.

Accepts Her Obligations.

One of the most feared and most respected of the opponents of the government, Sir Pherozeshah Mehta, phrased the idea in a ringing sentence that was greeted with tremendous enthusiasm at a massmeeting in the Bombay town hall when he said: "We have often met in this hall to assert our rights as citizens of the empire; we are now proud to meet to accept our duties and obligations."

Though the motive behind the present attitude of India be self-interest, Britain may feel proud that her work in India has been of such quality that its benefits are widely recognized and that its continuity is wanted; and she may be thankful for loyalty based on such grounds when there is no basis for it in race or tradition.

An outstanding Hindu leader, speaking in Allahabad, stated it openly when he said that he hoped the day might come when under the aegis of the crown of Great Britain and Ireland the Indian people might receive the status of self-government on the lines of the other British dominions and that it was because they believed India was capable of rising to that height under the British government that they were devoted and loyal to British rule.

It is not only from astute leaders who grasp the political significance of the position in which India now finds herself that present manifestations of loyalty are coming.

A grizzled old bazaar merchant came into one of our college buildings the other day, and on seeing a picture of the king-emperor raised his hands devoutly, saying: "He is our king. We eat his bread. We pray God to give victory to his arms."

Offer Armies Promptly.

Almost immediately after the nerve wracking period of suspense over England's decision was ended by the declaration of war against Germany, the ruling chiefs offered their armies for use wherever the English should need them. Ten of the chiefs proposed a gift of a hospital ship, the Loyalty, which has now been accepted by the viceroy. Everywhere funds are being raised for the care of wounded and the relief of distress. Even Indian ladies, whose freedom of gathering is so seriously hindered by the system of seclusion to which they are subjected, have formed Loyalty leagues, that have expressed "their readiness to place their services at the feet of the king-emperor in such manner as may be found suitable," and have begun to raise money for relief measures.

Everywhere huge sums for general support of the war and for the maintenance of hospitals and medical work have been subscribed. Not only English churches have made prayer for British victory; in mosque and temple as well special prayers have been held. A great gathering of Hindus in western India, on the occasion of a total eclipse of the sun, included prayers for the same object.

WAR PUTS TO THE TEST ADVANCES IN SURGERY.

American Medical Men in France Frequently Perform Operations Which Were Rare in Past.

PARIS, Oct. 29.—[Correspondence of the Associated Press.]—Advances made in surgery during the last few years are being utilized with remarkable results in the treatment of wounded soldiers.

American surgeons who have gone to the front, in particular, are performing frequent operations which, while not new to science, have been rare in the past. Through their efforts men who otherwise would be compelled to go through life maimed and disfigured are being reconstructed physically, while at the same time these surgeons are obtaining experience of such a varied character as would be impossible except in time of war.

Dr. Joseph Blake of New York, at the American ambulance hospital, is making a new nose. Over an artificial bridge he is grafting flesh and skin from the wounded man's forearm. Surgeons at the Val-de-Grace hospital constructed a new chin of rubber, covered with a beard trimmed according to the soldier's photograph. In the American ambulance a powerful electric magnet is installed for removal of shrapnel, making unnecessary the long and difficult operation of probing.

SOUTH AFRICAN REBELLION FAR FROM CRUSHED

De Wet and Beyers Are Still Overrunning the Country with Big Forces.

LONDON, Nov. 7.—That the rebellion in South Africa is still far from being crushed is admitted tonight. The official press bureau in a statement asserted that Gen. De Wet is operating with a large force in the direction of Lindley. He and his forces have destroyed the railway line at several points.

Another force of rebels is declared to have looted Harrissmith. A rebel commando is reported being pursued northward into the Waterberg district.

Beyers Leads Rebels On.

Gen. Beyers is reported to be in command of a rebel column which is moving down the Great Heart valley in the direction of Vryburg. The general campaign against the rebels is being conducted by Gen. Botha, premier of the Union of South Africa. He has massed forces to cut off the rebels at several points, but it is expected that the operations will take some time.

Col. Fourie, the rebel commandant, has been wounded and captured with seventy of his troopers near the Albert silver mine. Other minor successes are reported at a number of points.

Congo Belgians Fight Gamely.

HAVRE, via Paris, Nov. 7.—A report of the operations of the Belgians in the Congo, as published in the Courrier L'Armee Belge, says:

"Our troops have conducted themselves bravely in the colony of the Congo. A flying column has just taken Kissegnie, a fortified point on the bank of Lake Kivu. The troops in their assault on the fort inflicted heavy losses on the enemy.

"A German attempt to take Albertville, on the west shore of Lake Tanganyika, failed.

"A Belgian column from Katanga has entered British Rhodesia to aid the British forces from Abercorn in an operation directed against German East Africa."

Portugal's Revolt Spreads.

BERLIN, Nov. 7.—It is reported that the revolution kindled by German emissaries in the Portuguese colony of Angola, West Africa, is spreading. The colony's troops are insufficient to defend the southern frontier against German attacks and a brigade of troops is being sent from Portugal.

RAILROAD TIES OFFERED POOR FOR THE TAKING

Companies Willing to Give to Needy if Practical Plan Is Worked Out.

Stop! Read! Think!

A woman who had had a hard struggle in life, making a living for herself under adverse circumstances, found herself at the door of death Wednesday.

She called her sister to her bedside.

"I want you, when I am gone, to take $25 of my savings to The Tribune and ask them to see that it goes to help some worthy people."

Then she died—a Good Fellow. Yesterday the money was received by the Good Fellow department.

About 1,000,000 railway ties are discarded in Chicago every year. These ties are burned up in heaps or thrown away in dumping grounds. They make valuable fuel.

But thousands of Chicago poor families suffer for the want of fuel every winter.

Something might be done about it. Mostly it is a problem of distribution.

The railways are ready to give the ties to those who need them and the United Charities is anxious that the poor be supplied with fuel. The machinery or organization for the intermediate step is lacking.

Difficult to Find Way.

"It is difficult to arrive at a practical plan," was the observation of Eugene T. Lies, of the United Charities, when the fuel proposal was broached.

"If the railway companies can arrange storage space for the ties we may be able to get free hauling from transfer companies to take the ties to families in need of fuel. Also it might be that the roads could pile up the ties at certain points and give public notice that they might be had by the poor for the asking. That would prevent indiscriminate trespass on the railway property and probably a good many of the ties would be taken by those who need them."

Railroad Men Favor Plan.

The railroad men proved willing Good Fellows.

W. A. Gardner, president of the Chicago and Northwestern road, indorsed the general plan and pointed to difficulties to be avoided.

"The railroads are willing to take a part in the Good Fellow movement," he said. "And surely every road would be glad to turn the surplus discarded ties over to some organization for distribution. We have followed out the plan of giving some old ties to our laborers. But thousands of ties are taken out every year, and in many instances there is a surplus after the railroad has used as many as it needs in its shops and has supplied its own employés. These should go to the city's poor.

Million in Chicago Alone.

"There are 4,000 miles of railroad in Chicago, and at the rate of 3,000 ties to a mile there are 12,000,000 ties in the city. The average life of a tie is ten years, so more than 1,000,000 ties are discarded in Chicago alone.

"The railroads could not give indiscriminately, because too many people would be injured, but the charities could arrange to get the ties and have distributing points, arranging so only the deserving could get them, and the railroads would be protected."

"The Chicago, Burlington and Quincy would be glad to furnish its surplus ties to the charities," said H. E. Byram, vice president of the line. "No railroad should burn its 'scrap' cars and ties that may be of use in any way."

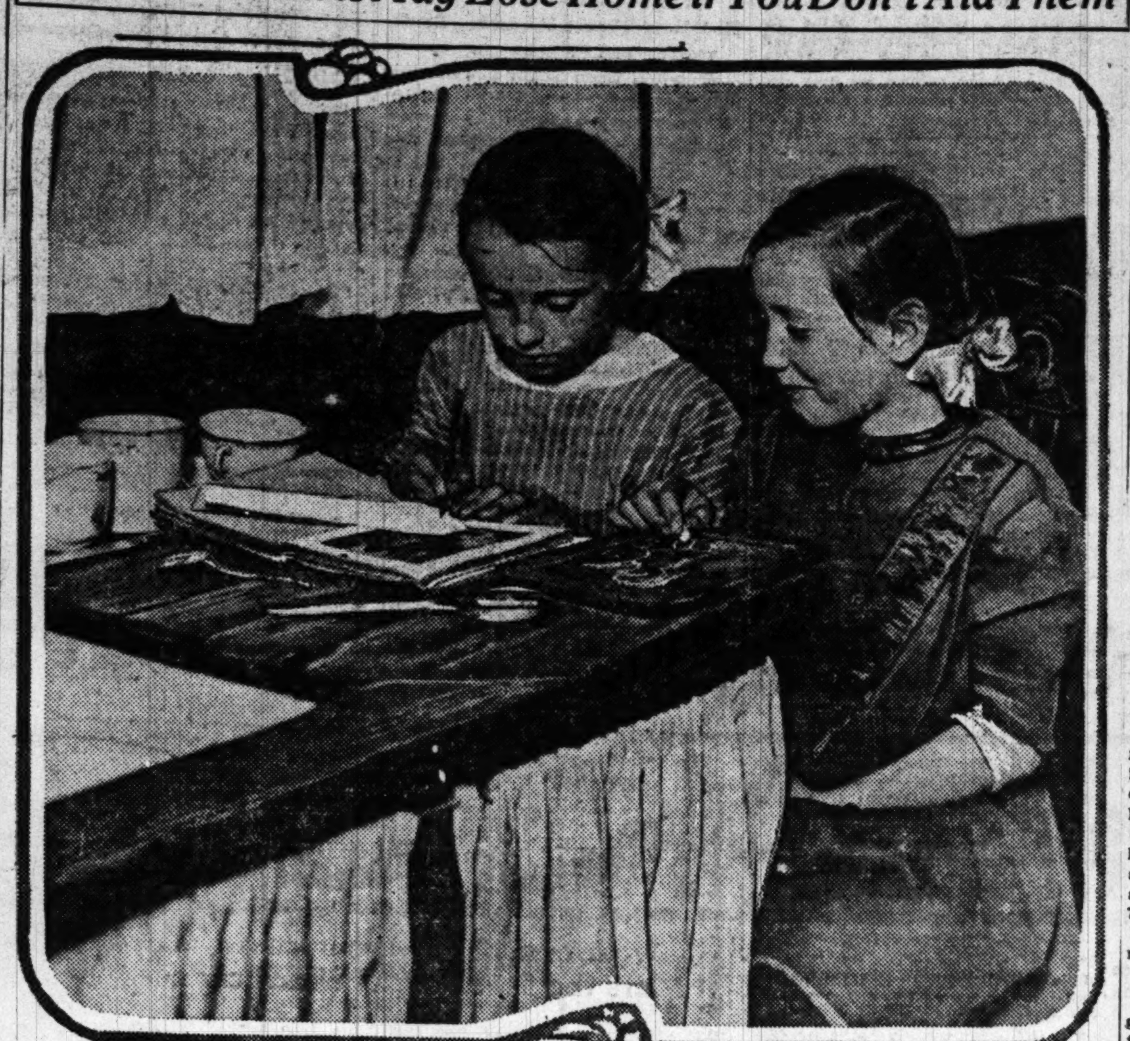
These Little Girls May Lose Home if You Don't Aid Them

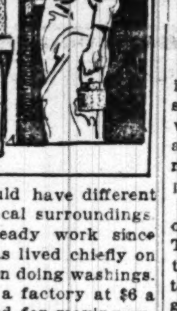


A YEAR ago the father of these little girls ran away and left the mother with three children to support. The mother earns a few dollars a month and tries hard to keep the youngsters dressed and fed. The children are all in school, but under present conditions unless help comes soon the home will be broken up and the children will be community charges. A Good Fellow could save the home.

See How Part of the World Lives! Will You Help to Improve It?

IF you could, Arabian Nights fashion, sit in your easy chair and see through walls and space into the homes of your neighbors, a wonder world of joys and sorrows would be revealed to you. The Good Fellow department is seeing for you into the homes of some of your fellow citizens, revealing the whole story of their life conditions and problems to you. If after reading over these "case stories" you think you would care to do anything for these people, send your name and address to the Good Fellow department of THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE.

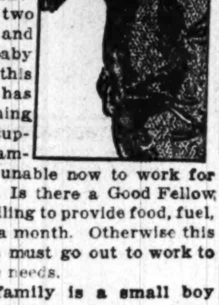
CENTRAL DISTRICT.



P.—The P. family is living in two basement rooms underneath a saloon. One of the rooms has a cement floor and is cold and damp. The other, although it has a board floor, is little better. There are four children under 12 years of age in this family. Baby Mike, aged 2, has been ill; he is recovering slowly for want of nourishing food and sunlight. Mr. L., who speaks little English, is fond of his children and wants to move from the place. He realizes that the children should have different moral as well as physical surroundings, but he has had no steady work since March. The family has lived chiefly on what Mrs. P. could earn doing washings. She now has work in a factory at $6 a week. Money is needed for moving expenses and first month's rent in dry, light rooms. Who will give this man employment so that the mother may return to the home and her children? The children need clothing.

NORTHERN DISTRICT.

T.—Man out of work, formerly teamster for an ice company. Four children ranging in age from 4 years to 4 months. No food in the house. At least $4 a week will be required to provide food. Employment for the man is the great need.



S.—Man deserted his family in the spring of 1914, leaving wife and two children, a boy and girl of 3. A baby was born this month. Woman has been doing washing by the day to support her little family, but will be unable now to work for several months. Is there a Good Fellow who would be willing to provide food, fuel, and rent of $10 a month. Otherwise this mother feels she must go out to work to provide for these needs.

M.—In this family is a small boy of 5 in the third stage of tuberculosis. The father is a motorman, but for a long time before he found work he was obliged to borrow money to live. In this way he got into the toils of loan sharks and has been struggling ever since to clear up his indebtedness. On this account he is unable to provide the nourishing food that this small boy needs. Besides food, the United Charities is anxious to secure toys and other things to provide amusement for the boy and some one to visit the little fellow and be interested in him. He has no chance to get well. There are four children in the family, and one of these, a boy, is in the first stage of tuberculosis.

Everybody Boost and Make it $3,000.

NOW is the time for all Good Fellows to come to the aid of the poor. A dollar spent now may accomplish preventive work that will save two or three dollars' worth of "cure" to remedy worse conditions by and by. Good Fellows can give money, supplies, and service, any or all. Here are the cash contributions of yesterday:

MASHER 'JONES' IDENTIFIED AS A LOOP BROKER

It Is Up to Mothers Whether Name of Annoyer Will Be Disclosed.

The real name of the mysterious "Mr. Jones," who has been annoying girls on the Illinois Central trains since last September, was given out last night by Officer Ferguson, who made the arrest. The policeman says he is a La Salle street broker. He formerly resided at the Chicago Beach hotel and now lives at the South Shore Country club. Reporters for THE TRIBUNE could not locate this man to get a statement from him or to verify the identification.

He obtained his release by proxy, as a result of a misunderstanding in Municipal Judge Graham's court. It is now a question among the mothers of the girls he has annoyed as to whether or not another complaint should be lodged against him. One of them insists that it should, and threatens to obtain a warrant for his arrest. She is Mrs. Laura Johnson of 7952 Brandon avenue, whose daughter, Laura, has been annoyed by the man a number of times.

Girl's Mother Talks.

"Why, it was so bad that Laura would go into another coach just to get away from this man," she said. "He would sit down next to her and leer at her over his newspaper. Then he'd keep moving closer and closer, until she would be so cramped in the seat in her efforts to get away from him that she would be actually shivering when she got home. On two or three occasions her knees seemed to be paralyzed, and we thought that maybe he had used a poison needle of some kind.

"All of the girls who rode home on the 6:30 train had the same experience, and it got so that they would watch out for this man and go into another coach. Then he even had the nerve to follow them from one coach to another. I am certainly glad he was arrested, but I am sorry he put it over on the judge. I'd swear to a warrant against him myself if Laura could identify him."

Girl Describes Him.

Another girl who reported similar experiences is Miss May Luckey of 3009 East Eighteenth street. She lives but a block from Miss Mary McKinney, who had "Mr. Jones" arrested. All described the man as having a short nose, sunken cheeks, large brown eyes, and slightly grayish hair. He always got off at the club, they said.

Hugh Graham said he had asked Assistant Prosecutor Walter Rooney to look up the law in the case.

"There isn't anything we can do that I know of," he said. "The girl said she didn't want to prosecute and her mother said the same thing, I was informed by the bailiff. I understood that the case was not being pushed because of the defendant's wife and the notoriety which it would bring to the girl."

Girls Deny Report.

"Neither Laura nor myself said we didn't want to prosecute," said Mrs. Margaret McKinney. "I didn't tell a bailiff that or any one else. 'All you want is to be protected against this man and the assurance that he won't annoy you again, isn't it' they asked Laura, and of course, not knowing anything about courts—it was her first time in one—she nodded. That was all. There were officials of the Illinois Central road present as witnesses who never were called on at all."

Brewer Present in Court?

It was said that a member of a brewing company was present in court with the attorney who represented "Mr. Jones."

Policeman William Keith, who was with Policeman George Ferguson when the latter arrested "Mr. Jones," said that a card was found in the defendant's pocket bearing the name of the broker and member of the South Shore Country club. He gave the same description of the man as the girls he annoyed. Many other girls in South Chicago have been annoyed by the man, but when questioned refused to admit it.

Here's a Good Plan for Good Fellows.

THE following letter, addressed to all Good Fellows, has been received from Mrs. Albert Pick.

It occurred to me recently that if the Good Fellows who own automobiles would charge their friends a nominal sum for each ride given them and devote the proceeds to the alleviation of the sufferings of the poor a great deal of good might be accomplished with a minimum of sacrifice.

I put this plan in operation, and in less than two weeks have realized a sum sufficient to warrant me in suggesting that other owners of machines in Chicago adopt the same plan.

If all Good Fellows who are fortunate enough to own cars will give this scheme a trial between now and the holidays many of poverty's victims will have good reason to thank God for the Good Fellows."

The Thomas B. Jeffery Company Jeffery Kenosha, Wis. U. S. A.

Drive the Car Now—Pay Later

WE CAN make it possible for you to own one of the beautiful 1915 Jeffery cars now, upon the most liberal terms.

We have a new idea in the marketing of motor cars which we believe will appeal to responsible people. In a sense, this is an experiment. So far as we know, it is an idea which has never been tried out upon a systematic scale. It is neither a "bargain sale" nor an attempt to railroad old or unsalable cars. It is not a means of "raising ready cash," but simply the application of merchandising methods to the sale of motor cars which have long obtained in the purchase of goods of similar importance—the extension of reasonable credit to responsible people.

We say to you—you can buy from us a 1915 Jeffery, making a cash payment of a portion of the price of the car—for the balance we will accept your notes.

You can have the car now—and pay for it while you enjoy it; or, if you wish, we will store the car for you for the winter without cost and it will be ready for you in the spring—all paid for.

We repeat: This is no "bargain sale." Only the utmost financial strength makes such a plan possible. We simply believe the time has come when the financially efficient manufacturers and dealers should apply merchandising methods of the present day to the sale of motor cars—and we are ready as usual to start the ball rolling.

Come in and see the car and we are sure we can arrive at a mutually satisfactory basis for your purchase of it.

We make only one reservation: We will not for the present accept used cars to apply on purchases made on this plan. The reason for this is obvious.

It is unnecessary for us to speak here of the quality of Jeffery cars. That is a matter that is too well known in Chicago to require comment.

"This is economy year and Jeffery made it so."

The test of a Jeffery Chesterfield "Six," made October 28th by the Contest Board of the Chicago Automobile Club, settled the economy question among the "sixes." 28.7 miles on a single gallon of gasoline leaves no ground for argument. We will gladly mail you a copy of the official report of the test, in full, if you desire.

EARLY SHOPPING GIVES IDLE WORK, SAY MERCHANTS

Christmas Buying Now Will Make Jobs for Thousands of Unemployed.

Do Your Christmas Shopping Now.

Thousands of persons are given employment during the holiday shopping season in the loop every year. The large department stores begin increasing their forces about Sept. 15 and gradually add more names to their pay rolls until Dec. 15, when the rush is at its height. The rate at which this increase is made depends entirely upon the number of shoppers.

Managers of the department stores this season have a double motive in urging the public to do the Christmas shopping early. It not only saves the clerks many hardships but gives employment to the unemployed more quickly.

Will Take on Help as Needed.

"There is no regular set time for increasing our forces," said L. T. Woodcock, manager for Marshall Field & Co. "The seasons vary. Sometimes we need an extra large force early in November Sometimes the rush begins later. We add the clerks as we need them.

"This year we feel that we ought to do our part in aiding the present situation as much as possible by giving work to as many as possible as early as possible. The public can coöperate with us by shopping early and creating the demand. It is just as easy to shop now as later, and it will give a job to the man who delivers the bundle at your door just as well as to the clerk who sells you a gold watch."

"Entirely Up to the Public."

"It is entirely up to the public whether or not we employ extra clerks," said R. C. Mangold, superintendent of the Boston Store. "The more shoppers the more salespeople."

Peter J. Dunne, superintendent of Mandel Brothers', asserted that the Christmas shopper should do his or her part to aid in solving the problem of the unemployed.

EASTERN FOREST FIRES CAUSING ENORMOUS LOSS.

Thousands of Dollars' Worth of Property Destroyed in New Jersey—Bay State Suffers Also.

Washington, D. C., Nov. 7.—One of the most severe and extensive droughts of record is making the forest fire situation in Atlantic coast states extremely serious, according to reports reaching the forest service here. Every day brings news of fresh fires.

Massachusetts has suffered severely. The governor recently closed the hunting season to keep hunters out of the woods, since careless campers are a prolific source of fires.

The latest destruction has been in New Jersey, where hundreds of thousands of dollars' worth of property has been destroyed.

THREE TELL OF LOSING WIVES

Husbands Whose Mates Left Never to Return Are Granted Decrees.

SEA AND PIANO CLASH.

Three stories of wives who never came back were told in the divorce courts yesterday.

William Sallins of 323 South Racine avenue was married on July 31 last. The following day he gave his bride, Mrs. Isabelle Morton Sallins, $80 to do some shopping. She may still be shopping, he told the court, for he hasn't seen her since. Besides, he said, he learned she had been divorced from a Mr. Shaffer less than a year previous A decree was granted.

Stays Home with Mother.

Mrs. Jessie S. Cookingham left her husband, Arthur D. Cookingham, six years ago to visit her mother in Brooklyn, N. Y. According to Cookingham, she wrote that she preferred to prolong her visit, as she was afraid her mother, who is wealthy, would not leave her anything if she returned to Chicago.

Jacob D. Clevenger of 1047 Belmont avenue was granted a divorce when he told Judge Walker that after thirteen years of married life his wife, Mrs. Leone Clevenger, decided they were not suited to each other and left.

Liked to Play Piano.

Mrs. Edith Weller liked to play the piano. Her husband's fancies ran to houseboats. He wanted to sell the piano and go to live in a houseboat on the Chicago river. The sea life did not appeal to Mrs. Weller and she demurred. Then, she said, her husband threatened to kill her. She won a divorce from Clyde Weller.

Mrs Lillian C. Davis, who admitted having lived in Chicago the whole twenty-four years and ten months of her life, was granted a divorce from Edward T. Davis on charges of cruelty.

"WOLF OF WALL STREET" HELD ON NEW "SURPRISE."

David Lamar, Pleading for Release at New York, Is Rearrested on a Third Indictment.

New York, Nov. 7.—[Special.]—David A. Lamar, the "wolf of Wall street," who was arrested yesterday in Peacock alley at the Waldorf, when pleading for his release this morning before Judge Rudkin in the United States District court got a complete surprise in the form of a rearrest on an indictment charging him and Edward Lauterbach with conspiracy.

That ended all possibility of his release on the ground that his affairs are now within only the jurisdiction of the Supreme court in Washington, D. C. had to plead to three indictments and he was released on $30,000 bail, with the privilege of applying to a local judge for a reduction.

Lauterbach has agreed to appear to plead to the indictment on Monday.

The indictment charging conspiracy on the part of Lamar and Lauterbach was returned on July 31. The offense is the same as described in the indictments against Lamar charging him with representing himself to be Congressman A. Mitchell Palmer of Pennsylvania in connection with his attempts to defraud the United States Steel corporation and J. P. Morgan & Co.

JUDGE PAM MAKES PLEA FOR MORE SOCIAL CENTERS

Would Use Schools in Foreign District in Evening as Antidote for Pool and Dance Halls.

Judge Hugo Pam addressed the Irish Fellowship club in the Hotel La Salle yesterday on "Fundamental Obligations as Conditions Precedent to the Enforcement of the Law."

Much of his address was a plea for social centers in foreign districts for the poorer classes.

"To some extent enforcement of the law is lax," he said, "but I don't attribute all evils of society to this lack.

"There ought to be many public school social centers wherein one of the first social requisites is the conduct of a citizenship class, where, under competent and patient instructors, aliens may be prepared for citizenship.

"Statistics show that 80 per cent of the crimes are committed by boys between the ages of 16 and 21 and also that 80 per cent of the crimes are committed between the hours of 6 and 11 at night."

SCOTCHED DETECTIVES SUE JUDGE GEMMILL FOR $50,000

Sleuths Assailed as Aid to Robbers Bring Slander Action Against Municipal Jurist.

Municipal Judge William N. Gemmill is made defendant in two $50,000 damage suits for alleged slander filed in the Superior court yesterday by Roderick O'Brien and Daniel Driscoll, detectives.

According to the declarations, the actions are based on the following statements alleged to have been made by Judge Gemmill:

"On Sept. 10 last E. G. Rodomski, sales manager for the Nagel-Chase company, while walking in Congress street, near Wabash avenue, at night, was held up by two men at the point of a gun. As soon as the job was finished the crooks knocked their victim down and ran across Congress street in the direction of two officers. These were Daniel Driscoll and Roderick O'Brien.

"Rodomski yelled loudly to the two officers to arrest the men. Instead of the police arresting them, however, the hold-up men delivered to Officers Driscoll and O'Brien the property they had taken from Rodomski and continued their run and made their escape.

"Rodomski pursued them to the officers, whom he notified that these men had held him up and also that he had seen the men give the officers his property, Whereupon these two officers arrested Rodomski."

BULL DOG RABIES HUNT HERO

Locks Its Jaws in Throat of Mad Animal Which Attacked Master.

The fighting prowess of a white bulldog assisted the police in killing a mad dog that terrorized residents on Oglesby avenue, at Seventy-ninth street, yesterday. The bulldog was chained in the yard of J. Link, its owner, 7806 Oglesby avenue, when the mad dog ran in. Link advanced in an attempt to frighten the animal away, when he was attacked. The bulldog waited until the maddened animal came within reach of his leash and got a throat hold. The police arrived soon afterward, but the grip of the bulldog could not be loosened until fifteen minutes after the mad dog had been shot.

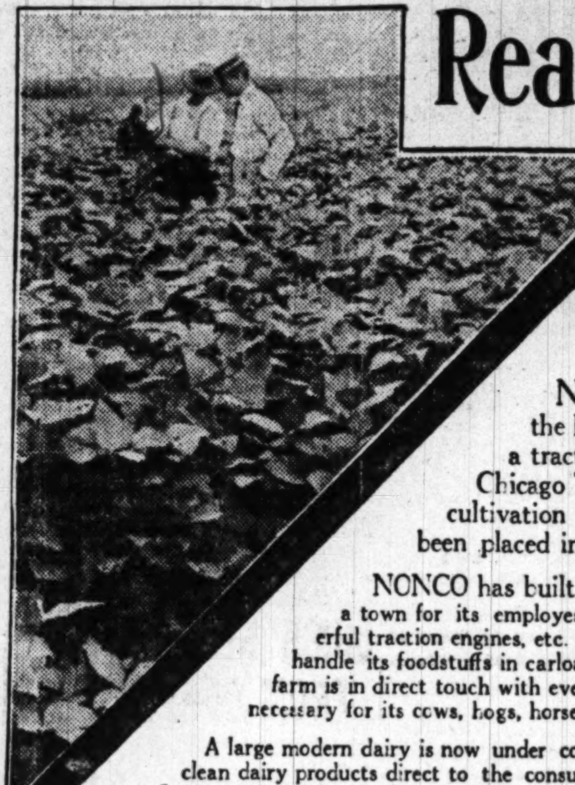
NONCO

OPERATING WORLD'S LARGEST TRUCK FARM



NONCO is a corporation operating A Huge Farm Factory—located in the heart of one of the most fertile areas of land on the American Continent. This wonderful farm is a tract of 3,000 acres, the title to which rests in the strongest title holding company in the world—The Chicago Title & Trust Company (capital and surplus $9,500,000). This immense body of land is being put into cultivation by Hollanders, the world's best and most thorough farmers. One-fifth of this immense farm has already been placed in cultivation and the balance will be developed as fast as it is possible.

NONCO has built a $30,000 power plant to keep the farm drained, furnish electric power and operate the water plant. It has built a town for its employes and a $22,000 club house for its skilled labor. It has installed the most modern farm machinery, gang plows, cultivators, powerful traction engines, etc. It has built and equipped its own transportation line to one of the large cities of the United States, thus giving it facilities to handle its foodstuffs in carload lots to the railroad terminals and docks. NONCO has also constructed its own telephone lines, so that each part of the immense farm is in direct touch with every other part and with the World's Markets as well. NONCO has its own warehouses, raises most of its own seed and grows the food necessary for its cows, hogs, horses, etc.

A large modern dairy is now under construction and when completed will supply fresh, clean dairy products direct to the consumer. NONCO will operate one of the largest and finest canneries in the United States, the products of which will go to the World's Markets under the Brand of NONCO Tomatoes, NONCO Corn, NONCO Peas, NONCO Asparagus, etc.

To accomplish these tremendous propositions Nonco already has assets—as shown by the report of the American Audit Company of July 1st, 1914—of $595,000. To get the rest of the farm under cultivation and to complete the Canning and Dairy Plants will require an additional amount of money. Therefore we are offering to the public a limited number of certificates of ownership in this magnificent farm factory.

YOU CAN STAY AT HOME AND STILL GET YOUR PROFITS FROM NONCO

Very little opportunity has ever been offered the public for investment in a scientifically cultivated farm. NONCO, however, offers valuable productive farm ownership without change of occupation or work. You can start right where you are—live at home—pursue your present occupation—and on the liberal terms of our selling plan pay for your farm in small payments that you won't feel, and be independent for life on the profits NONCO will share with you.

We offer you an ownership in this rich, cultivated farm by the acre—from one acre up. You purchase from NONCO a protected certificate of ownership for $125. This certificate stands for the ownership of one acre of this rich 3,000 acre farm. NONCO pays you from the start 6% annual interest, which is rental for your land. NONCO pays all taxes, all operating expenses, develops the soil, plants, cultivates, harvests and markets the crops and gives you in addition to the rental ONE-HALF THE NET CROP PROFITS FROM YOUR FARM AND A SHARE IN THE PROFITS OF THE CANNING FACTORY, THE DAIRY AND THE OTHER DEPARTMENTS OF THIS FARM FACTORY.

The Chicago Title & Trust Company certifies every one of these ownership certificates and holds in trust the title to every acre, so that no imcumbrance, mortgage or indebtedness can be placed against this land by us or by the trustees or by any one except the actual owners of the certificates.

TERMS OF PAYMENT

WE OFFER THESE INTEREST BEARING AND PROFIT SHARING OWNERSHIP CERTIFICATES for a limited time at

$20.00 DOWN AND $5.00 PER MONTH

NONCO has largely been financed in Holland; but the actual operating organization is here in the United States. In this organization are some of the world's most famous farm experts—men who throughout their lives have been drilled in the methods of getting the greatest riches from the soil. Their many years of world wide experience and study are now concentrated on making NONCO the world's most famous agricultural project and the pioneer in the "From-farm-to-table" plan. Among our investors are men foremost in the business world. Many of these men have increased their holdings from time to time and all of them are enthusiastic over their investment. Among them are men occupying positions so important that we cannot mention their names publicly in print. CARRANZAISTAS LOSE TEHUACAN IN HOT BATTLE

Several Hundred Killed as Former Federal Chiefs Capture City.

Washington, D. C., Nov. 7.—The capture of Tehuacan, Mexico, from the Carranza garrison by forces under Gens. Higinio, Aguilar, Argumedo, and Ruiz, formerly federal commanders, was reported to the state department today by Consul Canada at Vera Cruz. The message says several hundred were killed and wounded, but gives no details of the fighting.

Tehuacan is in the state of Puebla, seventy-five miles from the city of that name, where Carranza has removed with the members of his cabinet from Mexico City. It is on the line of the Mexican Southern railway.

New President Issues Edict.

Other advices to the department said Gen. Villa was still at Aguas Calientes and told of the proclamation of Gen. Gutierrez as provisional president of the southern republic under the decision of the recent Aguas Calientes convention which selected him for the post. He will take office next Tuesday.

During the day Rafael Zubaran Capmany, Carranza's confidential agent here, denied that the Carranza forces had been ordered to attack the American troops at Vera Cruz tomorrow. Secretary Garrison of the war department sought direct information from Gen. Funston as to the situation in Vera Cruz, however, no reply having been received late tonight.

To previous inquiries Gen. Funston has stated that all was quiet in the city and beyond the American outposts, his dispatches indicating no apprehension of an impending attack on his lines.

Carranza Practically Exiled.

With the selection of Gen. Eulalio Gutierrez by the Aguas Calientes peace conference, Carranza, once the provisional president, and successor of Gen. Huerta, is practically made an exile. The latest reports here say he has departed from his temporary capital of Puebla to go to Soledad, in the state of Vera Cruz, and within the shadow of the American army. Another report says Huerta has offered him a "comfortable home abroad."

Agents of the state department, if they have not already received instructions, probably will be asked to negotiate with the new president to insure the safety of foreigners at Vera Cruz, when the American troops leave, and to make satisfactory agreement with respect to the large collection of duties by Gen. Funston at that port.

Carranza Wants Villa Ousted.

Since it has been impossible for Carranza to carry the Aguas Calientes conference, he has been moving his capital gradually toward Vera Cruz. The convention has fixed Nov. 10 as the day for his retirement. Carranza is reported to be working for the retirement of Gen. Villa.

Crucial developments in Mexico are expected Sunday by administration officials. State department advices indicated that within two days Carranza will either relinquish his power or decide to make a last fight.

The action of the Aguas Calientes convention in setting a time limit for him to abdicate was believed here to be the real reason for the anticipated crisis.

Villa O. K.'s Gutierrez.

El Paso, Tex., Nov. 7.—Gen. Villa in a telegram to the Associated Press from Aguas Calientes dated yesterday says:

"Gen. Eulalio Gutierrez having taken oath of office today before the military convention assembled in this city as provisional president of the republic, I want it made known to the Mexican people and the world in general that I am in accord with his designation and that I will sustain him with the force of arms, because I consider him a revolutionist of a heart identical with that of the people, and that I am disposed to respect and make respected the law, and to procure betterment and well being for the people of my country.

The Drunkard's Daughter

"GO, FEEL WHAT I HAVE FELT!"

In all of the world's literature there is nothing that so truly portrays the pathetic and tragic life, misery, and suffering of the drinking man's mother, wife or sister as this poem, written by the daughter of a drunkard in reply to the criticism of a friend who had charged her with being a monomaniac upon the subject of temperance.

No fond father or devoted husband will continue indulgence after reading this wonderful poem unless he is virtually forced to do so by his diseased condition resulting from the poison of alcohol "stored up" in his system from previous indulgence.

The Neal Three Day Treatment is a godsend to all Drink or Drug users. It acts as an antidote for the poison of alcohol or drugs, eliminates it from the system, overcomes the diseased condition, creates a loathing for liquor or drugs, and restores normal mental and physical condition. It may be taken in the privacy of the home, hotel, or club, or at any Neal Institute.

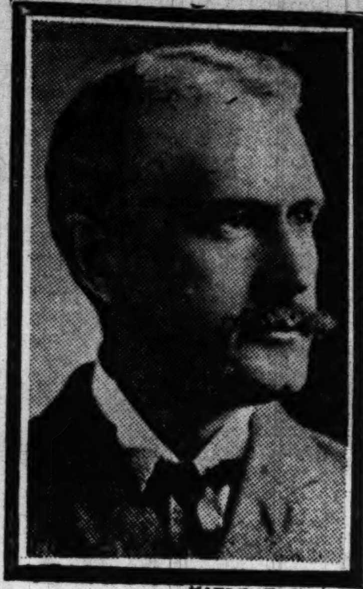
Born 1854. Died Nov. 7, 1914.



HATZENE Photo

John T. Mitchell, "father of duplicate whist in America," died yesterday at the Presbyterian hospital. He was born in 1854. Mr. Mitchell introduced duplicate whist into the United States in 1888. In the summer of that year he visited London, where he witnessed the playing of a game called "duplicate." It varied in some respects from whist. Mr. Mitchell upon his return to Chicago adapted the English game to standard whist and invented boards or trays for holding each player's "hands."

In 1902 Mr. Mitchell was elected president of the American Whist league. He was the author of books dealing with the theory of whist and duplicate whist. He also wrote extensively for the whist columns of Chicago newspapers.

Mr. Mitchell had been in the employ of the First National bank for a number of years. He is survived by two brothers and two sisters.

SHIN UP TREES AT 'BULL FIGHT'

Mr. Du Brock's Riding Pupils Flee Upward When Fete Becomes Rout.

1 KICKED OVER FENCE.

Claude is a pretty mild name for a riotous bull. A farmer by the name of Schwartz, who lives out in the neighborhood of the Glen View golf grounds, long since has turned the unmanageable Claude out of his pasture and has disclaimed all ownership of him.

Since that time Claude has had nothing particular to do but roam from field to field and pick fights with other bulls. His hatred for man and beast alike increased daily.

Likewise Ike Lewin for some time has had nothing particular to do. Ike was a cowboy on the range until the range was divided up and homesteaded. Then he took up bull fighting in Mexico, but the revolutions threw him out of work.

He Hears of Claude.

He joined a circus, but now the show season is over and he is rather up against it for the winter. He heard of Claude and brightened under the impetus of a sudden idea.

Walter Du Brock, proprietor of a riding academy at 1128 Foster avenue, each Saturday stages a little stunt for his pupils on his farm, which adjoins the Glen View grounds on the east. Lewin approached him with the theme of giving the riding pupils a genuine exhibition of Mexican bull fighting.

Mr. Du Brock was willing. A "ring" was constructed and a party of forty-four pupils, led by Mr. Du Brock, and about 200 townsfolk assembled yesterday to watch the fete.

Du Brock Sails Over Fence.

Claude had been rounded up and corralled for the occasion. Mr. Du Brock thought it a good plan to roil the bull up a bit to make the exhibition interesting. Accordingly he walked up to Claude and gave the bull's tail a vigorous twist. Claude resented this deeply and kicked Mr. Du Brock over the fence. He will be laid up for a couple of days.

Meantime the guests, about half of whom were young women, had left their mounts and taken positions of vantage on the roof of an adjoining shed. Then the bull fight was on. Waving a red flag and shouting something in Spanish which is said to be particularly distasteful to bulls, Mr. Lewin, the matador, danced in front of the animal.

Take to the Trees.

Claude lunged at him, but Mr. Lewin sidestepped gracefully. After a couple of other such lunges, however, Claude broke through the fence and plunged among the crowd, which had not mounted the shed. There was a hasty scramble for trees, but it was all useless.

Already Claude was dashing away across the pasture. The sport was too tame for him.

JOY RIDES IN MOTORBOAT CAUSE BANK CLERK'S FALL.

The federal grand jury yesterday returned an indictment against Edward L. Zacher, a former clerk in the La Salle National bank of La Salle, Ill. He is charged with embezzling $1,000 of the bank's funds.

The first embezzlement occured on April 24, 1913, when $500 was taken, according to the charges. Another $500 was embezzled on Oct. 9, 1913. Zacher is said to be in Detroit. The indictment was returned before Judge Carpenter.

Discovery of the peculations was made by national bank examiners. Zacher is said to have made restitution to the bank. The defendant had a large motor boat on the Illinois river. Joy trips on the boat are said to have eaten up much of the money taken. George Wilson, president of the bank, did not favor criminal prosecution, but the bank examiners notified District Attorney Clyne.

A bench warrant was issued for Zacher's arrest. Federal officials learned during the day that the defendant is coming to Chicago tomorrow and will surrender voluntarily.

HOYNE AIDS SEEK SOURCE OF BIG LEAK IN TAXES

In an effort to fix the blame for $80,000,000 in taxes which Cook county is said to have been cheated out of since 1910, the three members and the chief clerk of the board of review have been directed to bring to the County court tomorrow all of the complaints received by that board in the last three years.

State's Attorney Hoyne is seeking leave to start criminal proceedings against thousands of tax dodgers in the County court and the preliminary hearing was held on Friday.

The complaints which Mr. Hoyne's four assistants assigned to the case have subpœnaed into evidence are the written notices to the board of review asking that assessments as fixed by the board of assessors be reviewed by the board of review.

A score of instances of alleged tax dodging testified to before County Judge Owens on Friday showed that the assessments recommended by the field assessors and entered on the board of assessors' books had later been removed entirely from the record by members of the board.

Seek to Fix Responsibility.

The action of Mr. Hoyne's assistants in demanding the books of the board of review is taken to mean that they will endeavor to find out if the members of the board have been responsible for the striking off of wholesale assessments.

Subpœnas were served during the day on Roy O. West, president of the board; Fred Blocki and Thomas Webb, members, and Stephen Griffin, chief clerk. The books will be scanned by the accountants employed by Mr. Hoyne tomorrow, and on Tuesday, when the proceedings will be resumed, the first group of a procession of a hundred witnesses will testify.

KENTUCKY NIGHT RIDERS AMBUSHED AND SLAIN?

Bowling Green, Ky., Nov. 7.—Authorities tonight were investigating reports that "possum hunters" or night riders on their way to whip a family in Butler county were ambushed and three of them slain. The story was brought here by Butler county residents, who had fled for safety, saying they were accused of the ambushing.

Officials refuse to give out names, as the story is not confirmed.

According to the reports, notice had been served on a Butler county woman and her daughter that they would be whipped. The "possum hunters" while on their way to the house, were fired on as they passed through a woods. Since then two men have been missing and there is a newly made grave in the neighborhood. The woman, her daughter, and a son were whipped.

JURY OUT IN $200,000 SUIT.

Joseph Beifield, Sherman Hotel Owner, Accused of Breach of Contract.

A jury before Judge McKinley, after being out four hours, last evening, had failed to agree in the $200,000 damage suit brought by the Illinois Life Insurance company against Joseph Beifield, owner of the Hotel Sherman, for alleged breach of contract.

A sealed verdict is to be returned in case of agreement, to be read tomorrow morning. The jury is to resume its deliberations today.

It is alleged Beifield contracted to sublease the property at Madison and La Salle streets, now occupied by the Hotel La Salle, and later declined to carry out the terms of the agreement.

A verdict of death from a shock from electricity was returned by a coroner's jury yesterday at the inquest over the bodies of John McGovern, 7154 St. Lawrence avenue; Patrick Harvey, 6518 Dorchester avenue, and John Anderson, 8341 Lyons avenue, who were electrocuted Friday when at work on a bridge over the drainage canal.

QUICK RELIEF FROM CONSTIPATION

Get Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets.

That is the joyful cry of thousands since Dr. Edwards produced Olive Tablets, the substitute for calomel.

Dr. Edwards, a practicing physician for seventeen years and calomel's old-time enemy, discovered the formula for Olive Tablets while treating patients for chronic constipation and torpid livers.

Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets do not contain calomel, but a healing, soothing vegetable laxative.

No griping is the "keynote" of these little sugar-coated, olive-colored tablets. They cause the bowels and liver to act normally. They never force them to unnatural action.

If you have a "dark brown mouth" now and then—a bad breath, a dull, tired feeling—sick headache—torpid liver and are constipated, you'll find quick, sure and only pleasant results from one or two little Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets at bedtime.

Thousands take one or two every night just to keep right. Try them. 10c and 25c per box. All druggists.

FLAT FOOT

X-Ray views of weak foot, broken down arch, and foot restored to normal by Scholl's Foot-Eazer. NOTE how foot is lengthened by weakened condition.

SCHOLL'S Foot-Eazer

Banishes Foot Troubles

Weak ankles and arches, flat-foot, broken arches, corns, bunions, cramped toes and other ailments of the feet relieved and permanently corrected with Scholl's Foot-Eazer.

You Can Not Correct Foot Troubles With Shoes Built Around a Defective Foot

These will give you temporary relief, but permanent correction of the ailment can ONLY be obtained with Scholl's appliances.

There's a Scholl Appliance for Every Foot Ailment

Whatever your foot troubles may be, there is a Scholl Corrective appliance that will bring you instant and permanent relief.

TIRED, ACHING FEET are due to strain and weakening of the arch supporting muscles and ligaments. A Scholl Foot-Eazer relieves you.

CORNS AND CALLOUSES are caused by spreading and lengthening of the feet, pressure and friction results and the growth follows. Scholl's Absorbo Pads relieve this condition and Scholl's Fixo Corn Plasters remove the oldest corn in 48 hours.

CRAMPED TOES are the result of foot weakness, causing depression of the transverse arch and lengthening of the foot. This forces the toes against the shoe and causes cramping. The pain is intense. Scholl's Anterior Metatarsal Arch Supports relieve this condition permanently.

WEAK TURNING ANKLES require support to prevent the arch and ankle from rotating. Scholl's Foot-Eazer gives this support, and by retaining the bony structure in its proper position prevents turning of the ankle and arch.

BUNIONS. The crowding of the big toe to the outside of the foot makes bunions. To straighten the big toe is the first thing. Scholl's Toe Flex does this. Meanwhile, Scholl's Bunion Reducer should be worn to shield the swollen joint. It reduces swelling by absorption.

FLAT-FOOT AND BROKEN ARCHES follow weakening of the muscles and ligiments and cause terrible pains in feet and legs. Scholl's Foot-Eazer bridges the weight from heal to toes, supports the arch in proper position and relieves the trouble permanently.

Insist on Scholl's Appliances From Your Shoe Dealer

Do not allow your shoe dealer to give you a substitute article when you ask for Scholl's Foot Comfort Appliances. Scholl's are the original; others are imitations. If your dealer hasn't them we will gladly send you the name of a dealer who has. Write to Dr. Scholl personally for advice.

FAIL TO LOCATE 'KIDNAPED' GIRL

Police Can't Find Child, Seen Crying in Country, Who Told of Auto Ride.

THOUGHT A RUNAWAY.

Except for the testimony of a score of persons who had seen a little "pigtailed," hatless, weeping girl stumbling along the Aurora road the police of Naperville would have been ready last night to believe the supposed kidnaped child a myth.

That there was such a girl on the road there is no doubt, but the Naperville authorities now believe it likely that when she told of being carried away from Chicago in an automobile and then deserted at a lonely crossroads she was, to put it mildly, overstating the truth.

Seen by School Children.

It was about 4 o'clock Friday afternoon when the four children of Joseph Theison, on their way home from school, met the "kidnaped" girl in the road. When asked why she was crying the child, who said her name was Grace, told of a motor trip from Chicago and the failure of her companion to return for her after setting her down at the cross roads.

With the whole countryside aroused by the search it would have been almost certain that if she had been taken into a farmhouse her whereabouts would have been reported. In the opinion of Fred Palm, police chief at Naperville, the child would have applied for shelter before midnight if she were still wandering then.

Thinks She Went Home.

"The little girl has disappeared as completely as if she had been carried up into the clouds in a balloon," said Chief Palm last night. "She didn't act like a child who had been kidnaped, from what I have heard. I am inclined to think now she may have run away from home in Aurora. The story she told to the Theison children might have been all imagination. If that is the case I think she got back home before her parents were frightened enough to ask the police to look for her."

CIGARET SALE COSTS $50.

Cigar Dealer Fined for Selling "Nails" to Schoolboy on Policewoman's Testimony.

J. Goodman of 1155 Webster avenue, a cigar dealer, was fined $50 by Judge Fry yesterday on a charge of selling cigarets to Raymond Miller, 12 years old. Policewoman Agnes Walsh testified she saw Goodman sell cigarets to the boy. Goodman said he had no recollection of making such a sale. The policewoman told the court complaints have been frequent in the neighborhood of the Knickerbocker school, Clifton and Belden avenues, that schoolboys have been sold cigarets in violation of the law.

How You Can Get a Duster FREE

Every woman in Chicago needs a small bottle of Oil of Gladness in her home. You need it to make your work lighter and your home brighter. You need it to keep your new furniture in perfect condition and make your old furniture as good as new. You need it to keep your waxed or polished or painted floors clean and bright. You need it to keep your woodwork as clean and glistening as it was when your home was first finished. You need it for your painted kitchen walls, for your linoleum and for the tile work in your bathroom. You need it for your pictures, your leather covered furniture, your tables, chairs and piano.

Oil of Gladness—The Great Finish Renewer

OIL OF GLADNESS is not a polish. It is not a finish. It is not a varnish. It is a cleaner and finish renewer. It was first made and sold twenty years ago. It is the original compound for making dustless dusters and oil mops. Scores of imitations have been made but none of them have the ingredients that Oil of Gladness has. None of them do the work that Oil of Gladness does. Scores of oil mops and dusters have been made but none of them are anywhere near as good as those prepared with Oil of Gladness. If your furniture has become dim or dingy, a few drops of Oil of Gladness will remove every particle of dirt and bring back the same beauty the finish had when it was brand new. If it had a dull finish when new, Oil of Gladness will bring back that same dull finish. If it had a highly polished surface, Oil of Gladness will bring back the highly polished surface. If a bluish bloom has come on your mahogany furniture as the result of damp weather or poor finishes, Oil of Gladness will remove it.

No Varnish in It

There is not a particle of varnish in Oil of Gladness, not a particle of kerosene or benzine or gasoline. It is not inflammable. It is simply a wonderful oil compound that feeds the finish on any woodwork, cleans it, gives it life, keeps it in perfect condition. It is equally good on the finest piece of mahogany ever made or on a varnished floor. It is equally good on leather covered furniture, on linoleum, on painted walls, on tiled walls or tiled floors.

Put It On Your Oil Mop

If you have an oil mop of any kind or any make, and want to make it a perfect oil mop, simply rinse it out in warm water and let it dry, then pour on a few drops of Oil of Gladness, let it stand a few hours and you will have an Oil of Gladness Mop. No other preparation in the world will make as good a mop as Oil of Gladness will Remember that the oil is the important thing. The cotton material in all mops is practically the same. The handles are almost the same. But there is no oil mop on earth that has an oil in it that is equal to Oil of Gladness. Oil of Gladness is the original preparation for oil mops and dusters and no one can imitate it. No matter what kind of an oil mop you have, put Oil of Gladness on it and make it a perfect oil mop. You can get an Oil of Gladness Mop at your dealers if you wish to, but it isn't necessary if you have some other oil mop at present and a small bottle of Oil of Gladness. The oil is the important thing. Anybody can make a mop, but there is only one Oil of Gladness.

QUARANTINE IN "YARDS" MAY END IN 3 DAYS

Federal and State Experts Push Cattle Pen Disinfection Swiftly.

KILL PIGEONS, RATS.

The quarantine against the Chicago Union stockyards and the large packing houses may be lifted on Wednesday. The quarantine as first announced was to extend until Nov. 16.

The work of cleaning and disinfecting the stockyards was more than half completed at 5 o'clock yesterday, according to President A. G. Leonard of the stockyards company. A force of 1,000 men was kept at work all night under the glare of a specially installed system of electric lights to rush the work of cleaning out the pens, alleys, runways, and sheds, and to get them ready for the disinfecting squad today. President Leonard estimated by Tuesday the disinfecting work would be entirely completed. He will then ask for an inspection by the state live stock commission and the federal authorities, and seek to have the embargo lifted against the receipt of cattle for slaughter at the yards.

Last of Live Stock Killed.

The work of cleaning and disinfecting the cattle pens, chutes, barns, and killing floors at the packing houses will be started today. The last of the live stock on hand at the larger packing plants was killed during the day. State Veterinarian Dyson estimated it would not take the packers more than three days to complete the task of disinfecting their places.

"Just as soon as the yards and packing plants have been cleaned out and all the infected animals destroyed, the quarantine against the Chicago yards and packing plants will be raised," said Dr. Dyson. "I see no good reason for keeping the yards and plants closed after the proper precautionary measures have been complied with."

Members of the state live stock commission were surprised by the speed shown in cleaning and disinfecting the yards. They said it was at first expected it would take more than ten days to complete the job.

Shoot Pigeons in Yards.

The stockyards were deserted by all animals. Even the saddle horses used by the commission salesmen were resting peacefully in their barns. The only sign of excitement coincident with the shutting down of the yards was a shotgun onslaught on the hundreds of thousands of pigeons ordered killed by the state and government authorities. They have been doomed as disease germ carriers.

The work of driving the rats from the yards was started. Poison fumes were sprayed into the holes and crevices in the brick pavements in those pens in which the work of cleaning and disinfecting had been completed.

Spread of Disease Checked.

The spread of the foot and mouth disease at the yards has been checked, according to Dr. S. E. Bennett, in charge of the government bureau of animal industry. No new cases of the disease have been discovered in the yards proper for twenty-four hours. Five more cases of infection were discovered among the dairy show cattle. The authorities say there is no danger of the disease germs getting out of the barns in which the dairy cattle are quartered.

Semi-official sanction from the department of agriculture at Washington was received to allow the dairy show cattle to be kept under observation and not be slaughtered at once, if at all. Every effort will be made to bring the infected blooded animals through the epidemic and to restore them to a healthy state.

Deny Prices Are Uppish.

Emphatic denials were registered by the larger packing houses that any advance had been made on the prices of beef, pork, or mutton. Officials of Armour & Co. announced there was a sufficient supply of meats in Chicago to run this market for a month. They said there should be no advance in retail prices, as there had been no increase in wholesale prices.

The announcement from Cudahy & Co. was to the effect that the supply of all meats on hand was sufficient to tide this market over until after the quarantine had been lifted.

L. H. Hyman, secretary of Morris & Co., said his company at other points was slaughtering all the meats needed, and that enough was available to meet all requirements. Mr. Hyman said he could not see any reason at present for an advance in prices.

The quarantine will not interrupt the annual fall auction of fancy, breeding, and race horses which opens in the amphitheater at the stockyards tomorrow evening. Horses are not subject to the disease, according to State Veterinarian Dyson.

Continues to Spread in Illinois.

The disease continued to spread in Illinois. L. D. Canum, a wealthy farmer near Aledo, found the infection had appeared among his cattle and hogs. He killed ninety head of stock and 300 hogs, valued at $10,000 to prevent the disease from spreading. Five counties—Cook, Kane, Kendall, Livingston, and Menard—are under quarantine, and inspectors are working in Henry, McHenry, Lake, and Mercer counties, where the disease has been found. It is probable these will be quarantined.

A force of 100 men, under the direction of State Inspector John Miller, set to work to disinfect the yards at Peoria, which were shut down at midnight Friday. It was said that the task would be completed by Thursday. Packers there say they have enough stock on hand to keep them busy until the yards are reopened.

150 U. S. Inspectors.

The bureau of animal industry at Washington had 150 inspectors scattered throughout the infected states tracing and inspecting every shipment of cattle sent from the Chicago stock yards for two months. No more states were placed under federal quarantine during the day, and it was thought the height of the epidemic had been reached.

The packing houses and yards at Toledo, O., were closed and eight government inspectors were detailed to enforce the quarantine against moving any cattle from farm to farm or along public highways.

Indiana Farmers Summoned.

The foot and mouth disease has spread through Lake and Porter counties in Indiana with such rapidity that a meeting of farmers has been called for today at Merrillville, south of Gary. Milk shipments may be stopped to Chicago and manufacturing towns in northwestern Indiana. More than 300 cattle have been killed in the last two days in the Gary neighborhood, at the order of government inspectors.

The Detroit stockyards will be closed indefinitely beginning Tuesday after-

Sell Calendars to Aid Suffrage.

MISS HELEN NAGELY, MISS FANNY POLACHEK. MISS FLO SIBBETT. MRS. ROBERT L. McCALL

MISS AGNES ORR

The Illinois Suffrage association began a campaign yesterday to sell 100,000 calendars before Christmas to raise funds for the cause of suffrage. Young women, college students, and high school students under the direction of Mrs. George A. Soden, vice president and chairman of the finance committee of the organization, and Mrs. Robert L. McCall began a house to house canvass with the calendars. Women's clubs and organizations throughout the city will be asked to aid in the campaign. The calendars have a post card for each month as a reminder to a son to write to his mother or a daughter to write to her father.

Governor Urges 'No Hunting' Sign.

Springfield, Ill., Nov. 7.—[Special.]—Gov. Dunne today appealed to landowners and stock raisers to post trespassing signs and prevent trespassing during the hunting season as an aid in stamping out foot and mouth disease contagion. The appeal sent out by the governor follows:

"TO THE PUBLIC: My attention has been called to the fact that the foot and mouth contagion among cattle can be disseminated by persons passing from one pasture where infected herds are found to other farms and pastures and portions of the state where hitherto there has been no infection. My attention also has been called to the fact that the hunting season for quail is about to open and that many hunters in their zeal for the game may be tempted to cross pastures and other places occupied by cattle and other stock, and in this way unwittingly disseminate and spread the contagion.

"In view of these facts I desire to call to the attention of the people of the state and to farmers and stock herd raisers in particular the provisions of sections 29, 30, and 31 of the fish and game act, chapter 56, Hurd's revised statutes of 1913, which prohibits 'persons from hunting with gun or dog upon the grounds or premises of another, or upon the waters flowing over or standing on said lands or premises, without first obtaining from the owner, agent, or occupant of said lands or premises his, her, or their permission so to do and which make a violation of the law a misdemeanor punishable by fine or imprisonment. In view of the widespread and dangerous epidemic among cattle now prevailing in this state known as the foot and mouth disease, and in view of the easily communicable character of said disease by persons passing from one field to another, I would respectfully suggest to all farmers and live stock dealers that they post trespass notices upon their premises and that they exercise the utmost diligence in preventing such trespasses even to the extent of apprehending persons violating the provisions of this law.

"All trespassing upon stock farms should be rigidly prohibited at the present time. E. F. DUNNE, Governor."

TELL THEIR AGES, WOMEN'S STAND

Political Equality League Will Ask Law to Make It Compulsory at Polls.

REASONS FOR EVASION.

There are some women who don't want to tell their ages when they register for voting purposes. There are others who don't want people to think they don't like to tell their ages.

Both kinds spoke yesterday at the meeting of the Chicago Political Equality league in the Congress hotel. In the end a resolution was passed requesting the state legislature to pass a law which will make it unnecessary for both men and women to give their ages when registering.

When the resolution was read Mrs. Charles Nagely spoke against it.

Not Averse to Telling Age.

"I would just as soon tell my age," she said.

"Personally, I would just as soon tell mine," said Mrs. Heloise Winn. "But I know of thirty women in one hotel who wanted to vote but would not because of the requirement that they tell their ages. Most of them are in business, and it doesn't always pay to let your employer know how old you are. I know of women who go to a beauty parlor and fix all up whenever they ask for a job."

Man Places Age Too Low.

"When I was judge of election," said another woman, "a man I knew well gave his age as twelve years under what it actually was. I remembered that he was working for an express company which was laying off men."

Mrs. Alice Dow Allison said that the California legislature had repealed the clause in its election laws which required voters to tell their ages. Then the resolution passed.

A resolution was passed requesting Peter Reinberg to keep James Mullenbach as superintendent of Oak Forest and W. O. Chapman as warden of the county hospital.

WOMAN DEAD; THREE HELD.

Men Who Quarreled at Her House Held Responsible for Fatal Stab Wound.

Three men are being held in connection with the death of Mrs. Anna Pullen of 445 North Western avenue, who died of lockjaw, which developed from a stab wound on the arm. The prisoners describe themselves as Henry Cameron of 2300 North Cicero avenue, Richard Geary of 3305 West Chicago avenue, and David Carlson of 601 West Madison street. They are said to have become engaged in a quarrel in Mrs. Pullen's house.

Three Footpads Rob Man.

Three men, one a negro, attacked Levene [illegible] of [illegible] West Fiftieth street in Dear[illegible] between Twenty-eighth and Twenty-ninth street last evening. They robbed [illegible] of $3 and a gold watch.

GIRL SLEEPS AS BURGLAR WORKS THROUGH HOUSE.

Father Also Slumbers, but Golfing Sisters Return and Chase Negro Thief.

James Shannon of 4815 Forrestville avenue, a gauger employed by the federal government, was taking a nap yesterday afternoon. One of his daughters, Miss Angela M. Shannon, also was napping in a back bedroom.

Another daughter, Miss Eleanor Shannon, was baking a cake downstairs. When she had placed the last bit of icing on the cake she went upstairs to call her sister. She heard a rustle in the front bedroom and saw a hatless negro with bushy hair pawing through the bureau drawers. She called her father, who awakened with a startled grunt.

Flees; Drops the Loot.

The burglar, frightened by the noise, dashed through the hall, slid down the bannisters, and sped out of the open front door. On the way he dropped six diamond rings, a pearl ring, and a cameo. In the front bedroom several fine saws which he had used in opening the bureau drawers were found on the floor. In the parlor he had upset several vases and dragged all the music from a cabinet.

Misses Agnes E., Anna V., and Marion A. J. Shannon, other daughters, returned shortly afterward from playing golf. They are all school teachers. They found the negro had torn up six teachers' checks and had escaped with $22. He had overlooked change for $5 lying on the dresser in the room in which Miss Angela Shannon was asleep, although it was evident he had been in the room.

Invades Secret Hiding Place.

"I don't know how he found one of the rings and the cameo," said Miss Anna Shannon. "I had them in a secret hiding place upstairs. He certainly was a thorough burglar."

BONFIRE STARTS COSTLY BLAZE ON NORTH SIDE

15 FAMILIES DRIVEN OUT

Two boys collected some newspapers in an alley and built a bonfire in the vacant basement of a two story brick building at 846 Buckingham place yesterday afternoon. The basement caught fire and the boys fled. The flames were discovered by John T. Johnson, who lives next door, and he and a neighbor attempted to put them out. The fire got beyond their control, however, and an alarm was turned in.

The block between Clark and Halsted streets is an unusually long one. The north side of the street is occupied almost entirely by frame buildings. When firemen reached the scene they were unable to find a water plug in the whole block. Three frame structures to the east of the burning building already had caught fire and brands were being carried still farther by a high wind. Residents all along the block were dragging their household effects into the street.

Hose Run Long Distance.

A 4-11 alarm was turned in and Fire Marshal O'Connor arrived to direct the work of the firemen. They were compelled to go to Halsted and Clark streets before they could find a water plug to which to attach their hose. Five more houses were ablaze by this time, and it was thought that the whole block would be destroyed. All the houses from 820 to 852 were burning and the roof at 814 had caught fire from burning embers.

More than fifteen families were routed from their homes and the sidewalks were cluttered with household goods. Many women and children sought shelter in the home of Ald. John Kjellander, who lives across the street at 859 Buckingham place. Mrs. Sophie Sandstrom, 91 years old, who was affected by the smoke, was carried out of the first floor at 844 Buckingham place by Policeman James O'Meara and taken into the Kjellander residence.

Several Firemen Overcome.

Several members of truck company No. 55 were overcome by smoke, but soon revived and went back to their duties. Henry Malmberg of 2145 Farragut avenue, a member of truck company No. 22, and Lieut. James Cowley of engine company 78, were cut by falling glass.

The firemen worked two hours before the blaze was under control. The loss is estimated at $20,000.

The police learned that the fire was started by Carl Wolgast, 7 years old, of 866 Buckingham place, and Holger Sungh, 7 years old, of 850 Buckingham place. The Sungh boy told the police that the Wolgast boy started the bonfire.

Will Investigate Origin of Fire.

Battalion Chief Jacob Grauer said he would ask the fire attorney to investigate the origin of a fire which attacked a three story double brick building at 1137 Webster avenue early in the day. Five families were driven to the street, and Policeman Frank McInerney rescued Mrs. Mary Llercs, 55 years old, who was ill in bed on the second floor. She was unconscious from smoke when the policeman found her.

TWO COMPANIES INDICTED FOR SHIPPING LAW BREACHES

Art Shade Company and Chicago Spring Butt Company Accused of Billing Shipments Falsely.

Indictments were returned by the federal grand jury yesterday against the Art Shade company and the Chicago Spring Butt company, both Illinois corporations, on charges of violating the interstate commerce regulations relating to freight tariffs.

Both companies are charged with fraudulent billing of shipments of their products.

KILLED AT "LIQUOR PARTY."

Alexander Neva and Herman R. Spritzer attended a friendly little liquor party at the residence of a friend at 257 Sigel street last night. Something which the police were not able to learn about developed friction in the friendly gathering. Neva was hauled away in an ambulance and died on the way to a hospital. Spritzer was locked in the Hudson avenue police station. Spritzer is charged with stabbing Neva in the heart with a knife. Neva lived at 1501 La Salle street and was a printer. Spritzer lives at 1428 North Clark street.

TEST MILK BOTTLE LAW.

Supreme Court Likely to Be Asked to Pass on Ordinance Governing Labels.

The validity of the city ordinance prohibiting the sale of milk in bottles having names blown in the glass other than the name appearing on the bottle cap will be tested in the Illinois Supreme court, if a motion for a new trial is denied the city in the case against Martin A. Engdahl, a milk dealer at 1222 West Sixty-first street. A finding of not guilty was entered by Judge Scott yesterday when Engdahl appeared, but the case was not dismissed. Marshall Solberg, assistant corporation counsel, made a motion for a new trial and argument will be heard on Nov. 28.

BRANDEIS SEEKS AID FOR JEWS

Boston Attorney Coming to Chicago to Plead Cause of Colony in the Holy Land.

WAR CUTS OFF FUNDS.

Promoters of Rehabitation in Palestine Turn to U. S. for Support of Schools and as a Market.

Louis D. Brandeis, the Boston lawyer, is going to leave the railroads and trusts alone for a few weeks while he tours the country in the interest of the Jewish colonists in Palestine. He will arrive in Chicago on Nov. 20.

The European war has cut off the chief source of revenue funds raised in Europe—from the Jewish schools and agricultural colonies in the holy land. To meet the demand for funds a provisional committee was organized in America, of which Mr. Brandeis is made chairman. The committee is now the most influential Zionist body in the world, supplanting the international executive committee of five, which had its headquarters in Berlin prior to the declaration of war.

War May Help Cause.

Zionist publications have pointed out of late that the result of the war may prove of inestimable advantage to their cause. If England takes over Palestine from the Turks, they believe that it will be granted an autonomy like that of Canada or Ireland. Mr. Brandeis, it is expected, will not hesitate to discuss this aspect of the case in his capacity as representative of the Zionists the world over.

Mr. Brandeis is to be accompanied by Dr. Shemariah Levin, a member of the executive committee of five which is now unable to act. Dr. Levin was the chief agitator for the present American provisional committee.

Mr. Brandeis will speak before Sinai congregation Sunday morning, Nov. 22. In the evening both Mr. Brandeis and Dr. Levin will explain their program at the Douglas park auditorium.

This Appeal Issued.

The appeal which will be issued to the Jews of Chicago in connection with the Brandeis visit follows:

"We had given all the years of our lives, all our strength, and all our hopes to create Jewish settlements in the land of our fathers—in Palestine.

"By untold sacrifices and hardships we brought forth smiling vineyards, blossoming orchards of orange, almond and olive trees; from the rocks and the marshes, and we have nearly changed the face of a desolated country.

"We had organized modern schools and educational centers.

"We had revived the Hebrew tongue and made it the language of the Jew on his historical soil.

European Market Cut Off.

"Then came the European war and threw our fate in the balance. It has shut off the markets of the world to our products, crippled our financial institutions, halted industrial enterprises, and closed our schools.

"The question we ask ourselves in this grave crisis is, Will the efforts and sacrifices of a generation survive or be wiped out of existence?

"All European Jewries are stricken by the war. The American Jews alone are in a position to render assistance. Not relief but constructive work is necessary.

"KEEP OFF CAR PLATFORM."

Surface Line Conductor Has Two Arrested When They Refuse to Step In.

F. H. Petekus of 2512 North Western avenue was riding on the rear end of a Sixty-third street car last night, which is against the rules of the Surface Lines company, when another car collided with it at Hoyne avenue. Petekus was thrown to the street and received severe scalp wounds.

August Reif and Emil Neuschaefer of 1944 North Park avenue were the first victims in the crusade of the Surface Lines company to keep passengers off the rear platforms of cars. They were arrested yesterday by Policemen Reed and Sammon on complaint of a conductor on a North Clark street car after they had refused to step inside the car. The men said it was almost impossible to enter the car because of its crowded condition.

'SLEEPY' BURGLAR GETS $185

Thief Who Hides in Places Until They Close Makes Haul in Saloon.

The "sleepy burglar" made his third appearance in three months at the saloon of "Budd" White, 308 South Clark street, early yesterday and stole $185. This type of burglar enters a place shortly before closing time. He goes into a telephone booth, where he is likely to be overlooked, and after closing time saunters forth, gathers up what is in sight, and then lets himself out of a rear door. If he is detected in hiding, he pretends to be asleep.

2 HELD AFTER AUTO CRASH.

Racine Men Who Drove Car Into Another Machine Are Arrested.

Two men were arrested yesterday after an automobile in which they were riding crashed into a car driven by H. C. Edmonds of 7351 Harvard avenue at West Fifty-seventh street and Normal boulevard. They gave their names as Arthur Howe of 930 Forrest street, Racine, Wis., and Richard Nelson of 913 Wilson street, Racine. Howe was booked on a charge of driving an automobile while intoxicated and Nelson was booked for disorderly conduct.

WIFE WINS FIGHT TO DEATH WITH DRUNK HUSBAND

BLAMES HIS TWO FRIENDS.

Mrs. George F. Erk's husband was a cabinetmaker. He was sickly. He worked but little and became a heavy drinker.

During the thirty years of their married life Mrs. Erk slaved and drudged to keep the small home at 1849 North Halsted street free from debt. She took in washing and scrubbed floors without complaining. She loved her husband.

Six weeks ago Erk was taken to the Passavant Memorial hospital, seriously ill with dropsy, brought on by drink. His wife paid the hospital expense and looked eagerly forward to the time when her husband would return home. Last Saturday Dr. Otto H. Schulz permitted Erk to return home, cautioning him not to drink much—lest he go insane.

Now She's in Jail.

Last night a thin, little, gray haired woman was locked in a cell at the Sheffield avenue police station. It was Mrs. Erk, charged with the murder of her husband. She dried her tears on a worn black shawl she wore, and, half in German, half in English, brokenly told her story.

"George was all right when he first came back from the hospital," she sobbed. "But it was on Tuesday when he started to talk out of his head. He said a flock of ducks was flying over his bed and said the furniture was moving about. I asked the doctor about him, and he said it was 'the snakes.'

"He seemed to be a little better on Thursday and then on Friday he was worse. He wanted to go out, but we told him the doctor said he must not. Last night two men came to see him—friends, they said.

He Wakes Up Crazed.

"One was Louie Bruner, a saloonkeeper on Clybourn avenue. The other man I did not know. They said: 'Come out and take an automobile ride, it will do you good.' But we said no, he must not go out. I had a bottle of whisky in the house—I was to give him half a teaspoonful twice a day. He drank half a glass before the men left. We went to bed. He woke up at 5 o'clock and was out of his head.

"We made him go back to bed, Margaret, my daughter, and I, but he got up again at 7 o'clock. He wanted to go out and get his tools, he said. We kept him quiet till a few hours later, when he came into the kitchen with only his shirt on. He said he was going out. When I stopped him he started to choke me. Margaret came to help me and we all fell down in a heap.

Brandishes Butcher Knife.

"When I got up George had a butcher knife in his hand. I don't know where he got it, but he must have grabbed it as he fell near the table. Margaret and I clung to him and screamed, but he broke away from us. He backed to the other side of the room and came at me with the knife. There was a stove shaker on the floor and I snatched it up. He struck at me with the knife and cut me over the eye. I hit him on the head with the shaker. He jumped back and came at me again, cutting me on the hand. I struck him again with the shaker.

"There was a cut on his head where I had hit him, but he wouldn't stop. He rushed at me again and again, and every time I struck him on the head. I was beside myself with fear that he would kill Margaret and me, and I struck him with all my strength. I must have hit him seven or eight times before he dropped on the floor. I stooped down. He began to get cold. I screamed to Margaret to call a doctor. She ran outside and called the police, too. A doctor came. He said George was dead."

Erk was 55 years old and Mrs. Erk is 51. She was exonerated by a coroner's jury yesterday afternoon, but will be arraigned in court at the Sheffield avenue station tomorrow morning to face the charge against her on the police books.

Mayor and Mrs. Harrison Invited to Lead Grand March at First Welfare Hop at Dreamland.

Municipal dancing, the latest plan of the department of public welfare to curb immorality, will be inaugurated with a dance at Dreamland academy, South Paulina and West Van Buren streets, on Dec. 2.

Dances will be given four times a week thereafter.

An invitation has been extended to Mayor and Mrs. Harrison to lead the grand march, which will open the first dance, and prominent citizens have been invited to attend. The admission will be 15 cents per person.

CUPID'S AGENT FINED $100.

Joseph Platke, Who Used Mails to Advertise "Wealthy Widows," Pleads Guilty in Federal Court.

Judge Carpenter in the United States District court yesterday fined Joseph Platke, alias "J. Pluto," $100 and costs. Platke pleaded guilty to a charge of using the mails in a fraudulent matrimonial scheme. He advertised for members to join the "Polish Youths' Happiness club," where wealthy widows would be introduced for a fee of $5. Photographs of a "pretty widow with lots of money" were mailed to prospective members.

1914 ELECTION UPSETS 1916 "DOPE" BUCKET

BY ARTHUR SEARS HENNING.

Now that the "off year" election has disclosed the trend of public sentiment in the United States concerning the conduct of national affairs, the chiefs of the major political parties are preparing for a desperate struggle in the presidential canvass of 1916.

New leaders have been brought to the fore, particularly in the Republican party, by the results of the balloting. Most conspicuous is Whitman, the New York district attorney, who was elected by the Republicans in a landslide vote to the governorship of the state, and Frank Willis, chosen governor of Ohio. Already they are being hailed as Republican presidential possibilities in 1916. President Wilson expects one of them to be his opponent for reëlection.

Republicans "Come Back."

The election last Tuesday completely changed the aspect of political affairs in this country. The Republicans demonstrated that they could "come back," as they had predicted ever since the party split of 1912. They demonstrated that they still constitute the chief opposition of the party now in control of the government. They demonstrated that it is to them instead of to the Progressives the people will turn under normal circumstances when dissatisfaction with Democratic rule prevails.

The election disclosed the vulnerability of the Democratic party and of the Wilson administration. President Wilson apparently enjoys a widespread popularity among people of all political faiths because of his firm stand for pacific measures in dealing with the Mexican crisis and for American neutrality in the conflict raging in the eastern hemisphere.

Wilson Outranks His Party.

But the result of the election leaves no doubt that the Democratic party is considerably less popular than its titular head. The conspicuous success of the Republican candidates in nearly all the important state and national contests falls little short of classification as a Republican victory.

Analysis of the evidence supplied by the election returns demonstrates the prevalence of dissatisfaction with Democratic policies, notably the Underwood revision of the tariff, with its sectional inequalities, the "war" tax, the pork barrel appropriations, and other extravagances which the party stood pledged to abolish.

Blame Party for "Bad Times."

For the financial depression for the closing of factories and for the general increase of unemployment in the nation, the people evidently are inclined to blame the Democratic party.

In these off year election returns the Democrats may read a warning of the fate in store for them in 1916 unless existing conditions change materially. If American trade be revived and even increased by the demands of the warring nations for American products, if factories reopen and idle men generally return to work, one of the conditions affecting adversely the standing of the Democratic party in the nation will have been removed and the chances of defeat in 1916 lessened. But if "hard times" should continue the Wilson administration will face the verdict of 1916 with natural misgivings.

Wilson Will Run Again.

President Wilson seems to have a clear road to renomination by his party practically without opposition. He revised the tariff, established the federal reserve banking system, and put through legislation designed further to curb the trusts. Aside from the conservation measures at the next session the president has no further legislation to ask of congress.

There is good reason to believe that President Wilson, canny politician that he is, embarked upon his administration with a determination to take no chances upon the results of the 1914 election and to profit by the mistakes of his predecessors. He had observed the destruction of administration programs by the loss of the house of representatives at an off year election, notably under Cleveland and Taft. He decided to make hay while the sun shone.

With a grim determination he held congress on the job and insisted upon the passage of the principal measures on his program.

With the election of Whitman to the governorship of New York a new figure emerges above the national political horizon. There is no doubt that in his two year term as governor Whitman has the opportunity of establishing a progressive Republican record which will make him a leading aspirant for the nomination for president. Gov. Elect Willis of Ohio also becomes a figure in the national situation.

Many Still for Roosevelt.

Not a few progressive Republicans still desire to bring Col. Roosevelt back to their ranks in order to make him the candidate of their party in 1916. They regard him as the strongest candidate who can be put up against Wilson and many of them would even approve his nomination by the Republicans, even though he remains in the Progressive party and receives its choice for the presidency.

That the Progressive party faces a vital crisis is evidenced by the events of last week. The Progressive vote, which exceeded the Republican vote by the margin of nearly 1,000,000 in 1912, nearly vanished. Whether the party strength can be revived in 1916 is the great question confronting the Progressive leaders.

Thousands of Progressives undoubtedly believe that Col. Roosevelt, as a candidate for office, can restore the party vigor single handed. Others believe that the redoubtable colonel could not succeed in this undertaking unless the Republican party should cling to reactionary leadership and that even then triumph would be doubtful unless there should be a burning national issue upon which Roosevelt could present a stirring appeal to the people.

Col. Roosevelt's Pledge.

Whether Roosevelt will cling to the Progressive party or wind up its affairs and revert to the Republican party is another question. The query has been propounded to the colonel repeatedly and always he has returned an emphatic negative response. He even issued a pledge which has been accepted as a guarantee that he never would desert the Progressive party.

Could Be Nominee in 1916.

If Col. Roosevelt follows out the line of conduct here indicated he doubtless will endeavor to revive the party and to make it a force to reckon with in 1916. In that event Roosevelt could have the Progressive nomination if he wanted it and the Republicans would be called upon to decide whether they also should make him the nominee of their party or disregard him entirely and select a leader who has remained in their ranks.

"Standpatters" Back to Congress; "Uncle Joe" Cannon Chief Figure

THEY'RE coming back—the standpatters. Those old wheelhorses of the grand old Republican party—at least quite a few of them—are going back to the halls of congress. The nation's vote last Tuesday decided that. There is no doubt about it. The standpatters have done a grand little "come back" stunt.

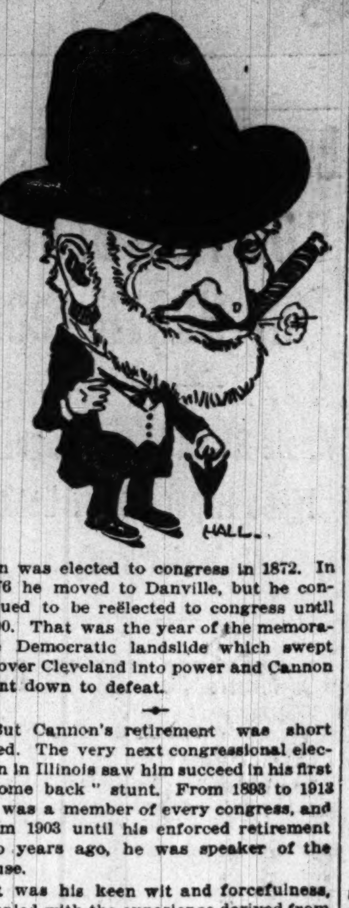
Of the numerous and sundry Republican standpatters who will flock back to congress probably the most known to fame is Joseph G. ("Uncle Joe") Cannon of Illinois. Last Tuesday's vote down in the Eighteenth Illinois district saw the venerable Sage of Danville reëstablished in the good graces of his neighbors and fellow citizens.

"Uncle Joe," it is true, was not elected by anything like his old time majority, but he "went over" safely. It is safe to say that when the aged Illinoisan walks down the center aisle of the national house of representatives to take the oath of office he will get the most enthusiastic reception ever accorded a representative elect to that chamber of legislation.

"Uncle Joe" again will take his place among the rulers of the nation. Once again the nation may expect to be mentally titillated by his aphorisms, and once more will anecdotes concerning him spread the length and breadth of the land. Now that "Uncle Joe" is back again, it is not unlikely that he will round out his present forty years of service in congress by further sundry and indefinite reëlections.

Joseph G. Cannon's first real bid for high public office and public fame was when he was elected to the house of representatives from Illinois in 1872. Before reciting his political career it may be excusable to mention that he was born at Greensboro, N. C., in 1836, and at the tender age of 4 was brought by his parents to a farm in Parke county, Ind. While a farmer boy he studied law and came to Tuscola, Douglas county, Ill., in 1859.

From Tuscola, then in the Fourteenth Illinois congressional district, Mr. Cannon was elected to congress in 1872. In 1876 he moved to Danville, but he continued to be reëlected to congress until 1890. That was the year of the memorable Democratic landslide which swept Grover Cleveland into power and Cannon went down to defeat.



But Cannon's retirement was short lived. The very next congressional election in Illinois saw him succeed in his first "come back" stunt. From 1893 to 1913 he was a member of every congress, and from 1903 until his enforced retirement two years ago, he was speaker of the house.

It was his keen wit and forcefulness, coupled with the experience derived from his many years in congress, that made Cannon a power.

Now at the ripe age of 78 years Mr. Cannon again will resume his refurbished legislative toga. Who knows whether he again will be called on to lay it aside?

AUTO TIRE BLAST INJURES SEARS-ROEBUCK CO. CHIEF.

F. A. Beebe, General Superintendent of Mail Order Concern, Breaks Leg When Tube Explodes.

F. A. Beebe, general manager for the Sears-Roebuck company plants throughout the country, is in the Jane McAlister hospital in Waukegan with a broken leg.

Mr. Beebe and E. R. Shoenberger, a sales manager for the Ford Manufacturing company at 2339 La Salle street, started out Friday for a week-end hunting excursion near Waukegan. When the town was reached Mr. Beebe discovered the tire on one of the rear wheels of his car needed air.

He drove into a garage and set to work with a pump. There was a loud report and Mr. Beebe was carried out on a stretcher. He lives at 3357 Warren avenue. Mr. Schoenberger lives at 3249 Franklin boulevard.

GEN. SICKLES' WILL LEAVES WIDOW AND SON NOTHING

Bequeathed $5,000 to His Housekeeper, Who "Caused Estrangement," and She Since Has Died.

New York, Nov. 7.—[Special.]—According to the will of Gen. Daniel E. Sickles, filed for probate in the Surrogate's court today, the widow of the hero of Gettysburg who nursed him in his final illness after an estrangement of twenty-nine years, and his only son, are cut off without a penny, while the testator's "good friend," Eleanor Earle Wilmerding, is the recipient of a bequest of $5,000 "as a testimonial of my appreciation of her faithful services."

Miss Wilmerding was for many years Gen. Sickles' housekeeper at his home, 23 Fifth avenue, and Mrs. Sickles named her presence in the general's house as the cause of her estrangement from her husband.

Miss Wilmerding died after the will was drawn a year ago.

COL. ROOSEVELT NOT TO RUN FOR PRESIDENT AGAIN

New York Progressive Leader Says T. R. Will Not Be a Candidate in 1916.

New York, Nov. 7.—[Special.]—Col. Theodore Roosevelt will not seek to be a candidate for the presidency in 1916, ex-Chairman William H. Hotchkiss of the Progressive state committee announced today. At his office, 55 Liberty street, Mr. Hotchkiss said:

"It is asked if the result of the election eliminates Col. Roosevelt. I know that Col. Roosevelt will not be a candidate for president in 1916, and you can't eliminate a man who isn't a candidate.

"I know that the colonel has no idea of running two years from now because he told me within a week after the election of 1912 that he would not. We discussed together a number of men as possibilities for the Progressive nomination for president in 1916.

Progressive Principles Alive.

"The colonel desires to occupy the position of a philosopher and not of a potential officeseeker.

"As to the Progressive party as an organization I have frequently expressed my views; as to the progressive movement I am confident if not in two years then in six years it will be the dominant factor in American politics. This may come through the Republican party; it may work out through the Democratic party, but if neither of the old parties becomes sufficiently progressive, then either the present Progressive party or some other party embodying its principles will be put in charge of the government.

Says Party Has 1,250,000 Votes.

"I don't think the press has been fair to the Progressive party. The Progressives polled 1,250,000 votes in the country. That gives them a balance of power that is to be reckoned with in some sections. Besides they have elected some senators, congressmen, and governors."

George W. Perkins, chairman of the national executive committee of the Progressive party, refused to say if he had any intention of resigning that office. The committee will hold a meeting in Chicago on Dec. 2.

Roena Club Receives.

The first winter reception and card party of the Roena club, composed of young society women, was held yesterday in the Hotel La Salle. The guests were: Miss Mildred Strenning, Miss Evangeline Idarius, Miss Betty Boyce, Miss Hazel Caranara, Miss Charlotte Pengilly, Miss Irene Landerson. Miss Irene Brown, president of the club, presided during the afternoon, and was assisted in receiving the members by Miss Ruth Burgess, Miss Geraldine Colby, Miss Margaret Hazzard, Miss Imogene Colby, Miss Ethel Devery.

CITY JUDGES ASK RAISE IN SALARY

$8,000 THE SUM SOUGHT.

Judges of the Municipal court yesterday appealed to the council finance committee for a salary of $8,000. They now receive $6,000. The plea was made that the present compensation is not adequate to attract a high grade class of men.

Chief Justice Harry Olson, who receives $10,000, introduced the subject. He expressed the view that the judges are underpaid.

"It is necessary to raise the standard of judges by getting better material," said the chief justice. "This can be done best by making the position more attractive, especially from a pecuniary standpoint. The tenure of office is short, and many demands are made on the judges for contributions to charitable organizations and campaign funds.

Judges Must Be Expert.

"Judges in other courts become expert in certain cases; the judges of the Municipal court have to become expert in all cases. The comparative infrequency with which the Supreme court reverses the decisions of the Municipal court indicates the quality of the work done. Although primarily intended as a criminal court, it has become a great civil tribunal. Cases involving $100,000 are often heard."

Judge Henry C. Beitler said he was talking only for the good of the court, as he will retire Jan. 1.

"I have no direct interest in this matter," he continued, "but it is only right to state that $6,000 is not enough in view of the large experience a Municipal court judge must have. I have served continuously since the court was organized, and I feel that the salary should be $8,000."

New York Pays $7,500.

Judge Hugh J. Kearns asserted that the fines and costs collected in the court made it practically self-supporting. Judge John A. Mahoney declared that certain New York jurists receive $7,500 for fourteen years "without doing one-fifth of the work done here."

Judge John A. Rooney also addressed the committee.

The 1914 appropriation bill provided $180,000 for thirty associate judges. The proposed increase would make the appropriation $240,000. The finance committee took the request under advisement.

SCULLY LIKELY TO OUST WOMEN AS POLLS OFFICIALS

Progressives to Be Succeeded by G. O. P. as Second Party, Is Report.

The first definite result of the recent election in Chicago is likely to be a ruling from County Judge-Elect Thomas F. Scully that there shall be no women judges and clerks of election in the voting precincts under the jurisdiction of the board of election commissioners.

Coupled with this is likely to be an order that the Republican party shall be recognized as the "second" party in board of election commissioner affairs. This would mean the elimination of all of the present Progressives who were accepted as judges and clerks by County Judge Owens on the recommendation of the Progressive county committee, and the substitution for the Progressives of election officials sugested by the Republican county organization.

Information Authoritative.

This information came from an unquestioned source yesterday and is believed to be correct. It is in line with the fears expressed by Progressive county leaders prior to the election, except that the Progressives feared the danger now imminent, should Northup, the Republican nominee, have won the election.

Those who have been on the inside have had no belief that a satisfactory dicker was made between the Progressives and Judge Scully, which would have assured the bull moosers retention of their present privileges and patronage, should the defeat of Northup be encompassed by a strong vote for the Progressive nominee, William Prentiss.

Take It Up with Dunne.

The contrary is that a definite and determined movement is on foot to bring pressure to bear upon Gov. Dunne to change his mind as to which is the "second" party in the state and to allot to Republicans the fat line of jobs now held by the Progressives.

This list starts with the public utility commissionership now held by Frank H. Funk and includes a membership on the court of claims, a commissionership at the Pontiac reformatory, and several other lesser positions from a pay roll standpoint.

It is understood, and has been, that Gov. Dunne expects to take care of William L. O'Connell, the retiring county treasurer, with one of the places on the utilities board. Gov. Dunne appointed former Gov. Richard Yates, as a Republican, James E. Quan, Democrat, who was made chairman of the commission, and Frank H. Funk, Progressive.

Quan's Record Good.

The gossip at the time was that Mr. Quan was to hold office only until it came time to name Mr. O'Connell. Chairman Quan's record on the board, it is said, is such as to warrant his retention by the governor from all angles of consideration, and the electio nresult makes it possible for the Progressive to be supplanted.

One of the first duties of County Judge Elect Scully will be to name a board of election commissioners, which, in turn, will choose and qualify the judges and clerks in the 1,560 election precincts under the board's jurisdiction.

Judge Owens' Prerogative.

County Judge Owens exercised his judicial prerogative in construing the woman suffrage act, in conjunction with the general election law, in decreeing that women judges and clerks might be named under the elections act. He issued a court order also that the Progressive party, by the 1912 election result, was the "second" party in Cook county.

The word from the front is that Judge Scully will take a diametrically opposite position in each situation.

There has been considerable gossip that many of the women who served as judges and clerks during the past year have no inclination to be appointed again, in view of the duties imposed by the election law, the physical discomforts attending the job, and for other reasons.

McGOVERN ASKS RECOUNT.

Milwaukee, Wis., Nov. 7.—Proceedings were instituted today by Gov. McGovern for a recount of the United States senatorial vote cast at Tuesday's election in Milwaukee county. Husting, Democrat, leads McGovern, Republican, according to latest figures by about 1,500 votes.

SUFFRAGE WINS IN MONTANA

Majority of 3,500 Indicated When More Complete Election Returns Are Received.

Helena, Mont., Nov. 7.—Women's suffrage apparently is an acomplished fact in Montana. After favoring first one side and then the other for three days returns today began showing strongly in its favor, and with half the precincts of the state reported a majority of 3,500 was indicated.

Mrs. CHARLES S. WHITMAN and daughter

For the first time in many years, the rooms of the executive mansion at Albany will ring with the gleeful laughter of a young child. Little Olive Whitman is a vivacious young lady and the only child of the governor-elect and Mrs. Whitman. Mrs. Whitman was Miss Olive Hitchcock and was married in 1908 to Mr. Whitman, who was then judge of the Court of General Sessions. She is an ardent worker in the suffragist ranks, and has achieved a reputation all her own as a civic and good government worker. During the campaign of 1909, when Judge Whitman was strenuously fighting for his election to the office of district attorney, Mrs. Whitman was one of his most able campaign marshals.

SULLIVAN MEN FIGHT HARRISON

Hopkins or Burke May Oppose Mayor in Spring Election.

IF ROGER DOESN'T RUN.

The Sullivan leaders yesterday satisfied themselves that Mayor Harrison already is a candidate for the sixth term, and they allowed that at the proper time they would have a candidate in the field who could command the solid support of the Sullivan forces.

While Mr. Sullivan himself displayed a forgiving disposition and said it "didn't get one anything to harbor a grudge," the ward leaders and other aids who went into the trenches with the biscuit man are out for revenge. Mayor Harrison, as well as Gov. Dunne, is blamed in part for the failure of Sullivan to carry Cook county by 75,000.

"Dog in the Manger."

Harrison is charged with playing a "dog in the manger" role by Mr. Sullivan's friends, and they are loud in their assertions that they would even up the score next spring.

It was recalled that the mayor did not make any speeches for Mr. Sullivan in the election campaign. In the primary campaign he attacked the cracker man with great vigor, as did Gov. Dunne, but the governor recanted after the primary.

Sullivan's friends believe the real Harrison men knifed him in every ward in the city, and that Sullivan's big vote represented in part a considerable Republican vote.

Affects Plum Tree.

The injection of the mayoralty into the situation at this time is expected to have a bearing on the allotment of patronage that is to be made by the new county officials.

The Sullivan people, insofar as they can control the pie counter, will divide up their helping by wards and not by individuals, trying to reward their faithful supporters, even though some of them may be friendly to Mayor Harrison.

Whether the Harrison men elected to the county offices will be as magnanimous is yet to be determined. [illegible]berg, the new president of the county board, and John E. Traeger, the new sheriff, are Harrison men before any one else, and an effort may be made to divide up the jobs in their offices with a view to strengthening the Harrison lines around the town.

Control Election Machinery.

On the other hand, the Sullivan people ought to have little trouble controlling the election machinery with County Judge Elect Scully naming the new board of election commissioners an dthe attorney for the board.

Either Superior Court Judge Richard E. Burke or Municipal Court Judge Jacob Hopkins probably will be the candidate of the Sullivan forces for the mayoralty nomination in the event of Mr. Sullivan refusing to entertain the proposition himself.

The county committee, dominated by the Harrison people, passed formal resolutions during the day indorsing Zimmer for postmaster.

Patronage at the disposal of the county judge will be discussed at French Lick Springs, Ind., this week. Mr. Scully, judge-elect, is already at the Taggart watering place, and a number of the Democratic chiefs are planning to join him tomorrow.

ROGER SULLIVAN ADMITS DEFEAT; "REGRETS FEW"

Deplores Fact That Religious Prejudice Should Enter Into Campaign.

ROGER C. SULLIVAN issued a statement yesterday which carried the tacit admission that Senator Sherman had been reelected. This is coupled with a saving clause which intimates that the final result of the official canvass may make a difference in the finish, as indicated by the complete but unofficial returns.

Mr. Sullivan suggests that the religious issue in the downstate territory may have been the decisive factor of the senatorial campaign.

Mr. Sullivan's statement in full follows:

BY ROGER C. SULLIVAN.

No matter what the final result of the official canvass may be, it will bring few regrets, no deep disappointment, and much personal satisfaction.

It is regrettable that we have people so minded as to penalize a man for the religion he got from his mother, and that we have men willing to capitalize this baseness for the sake of getting office. This appeal to religious prejudice, particularly when given countenance by high personages in Democratic officialdom, is still effective in some parts of Illinois.

Made a Clean Campaign.

No man ever had a cleaner, more fairly won nomination. It came by direct vote of the people in the face of combined opposition from all political machines and all political payrolls—city, county, state, and federal—in Illinois; it came without appeal to prejudice or factionalism, or resort to personalities. By all the rules of the game such a verdict should have been accepted. It is to be regretted that some opponents of my nomination could not accept the verdict of the state-wide primary election in the spirit that governed the leading contestants in the primary.

It is regrettable that the people were unwilling to give the national administration's work a fair chance to be tested by time. Cook county seems to be about the only debatable ground in the country where consistent Democratic success was recorded. This is, personally, highly gratifying.

Recites Chicago Victory.

Our campaign was made strictly and absolutely in line with national party policy and record. This did not hold the normal Democratic strength downstate. Here, where I live and am personally well known, I have carried by more than 57,000 the county that the Democratic presidential nominee lost by more than 36,000 only two years ago. If the downstate people had known me better, I believe the result would have been different in spite of the adverse influences.

Therefore, under all the circumstances and in the light of election returns from elsewhere, personal satisfaction far outweighs disappointment. I owe more than I can repay or express to the friends numbered literally by thousands who, without hope of reward, made my cause their own. To them I wish to extend my thanks in fullest measure for their unselfish efforts in my behalf.

BRYAN IN TOWN.

Secretary of State William J. Bryan was in town for two hours during the day, headed for Washington. He declined to comment upon the Illinois result. His quoted interviews in the afternoon papers indicate that he is more or less satisfied with the national figures.

Vice President Marshall was in Chicago for a few hours. He preferred to discuss the foot and mouth disease situation at the stockyards, rather than election finals.

If Mr. Bryan had talked about the Illinois condition, he could have secured considerable personal satisfaction from the downstate returns on the senatorship. Most of the counties in the Bryan Democratic belt which went wild about Bryan in 1896 and stuck with him largely in 1900 gave Sherman a plurality on Tuesday. Sherman carried Pike and Morgan counties, for instance, down in the Rainey congressional district.

Sullivan Ignores Bryan.

In the Sullivan statement there is a noticeable absence of reference to the case of Mr. Bryan and the open activity of the Bryan Democratic leaders against Sullivan all through the string of counties normally Democratic through thick and thin in past campaigns.

MINERS IGNORE U. S. TROOPS.

Arkansas Fields Will Not Be Placed Under Martial Law Unless Strikers Start Trouble.

Prairie Creek, Ark., Nov. 7.—The advent of the United States troops failed to produce even a ripple of excitement in this section, and today few miners appeared at the temporary camp pitched by the two troops of the Fifth cavalry, which reached here late yesterday afternoon. Unless some overt act on the part of the miners disturbs the peace the soldiers will not put the mining section under martial law, according to Maj. N. P. McClure, the commanding officer.

FLANAGAN SAYS BILLINGS LOST RACE FOR JUDGESHIP.

Democratic Candidate Claims Errors Found in Police Returns Give Victory to Him by 4,356.

The election of Patrick B. Flanagan, Democrat, over Charles L. Billings, for judge of the Municipal court for the vacancy, is now claimed by Mr. Flanagan's friends on the face of the police returns.

The police figures as reported to the City News association were footed yesterday by representatives of Mr. Flanagan, with this result:

	Men.	Women.	Total.
ORIGINAL FIGURES.
Billings	106,055	46,872	152,927
Flanagan	110,405	37,878	149,282
REVISED FIGURES [Flanagan count].
Billings	106,055	41,875	147,930
Flanagan	114,808	37,478	152,286

On the face of the totals as made by the experts for Mr. Flanagan, Flanagan's plurality over Billings by the police returns is 4,356. The police returns as published gave Billings a plurality over Flanagan of 2,945.

The official canvass now in progress will determine the matter.

THE FEAR OF MILITARISM.

A reader of THE TRIBUNE asks us: "Is there a safe middle ground of adequate defense between the two extremes of absolute disarmament and 'militarism'? I have a feeling that there is not, and it is the fear of one extreme that drives me to the other."

Is there a "safe middle ground"? No. Neither is there a safe extreme ground. There is no safe ground either in the life of men or nations. Only death is safe. Whatever course we adopt, or though we drift without course, as we do now, there will be dangers and responsibilities. Of such is human history, and the American people cannot hope to escape the law.

But speaking relatively for our own generation, there is about as much danger of America becoming "militarist" as of its becoming Mohammedan.

Militarism, in the true sense, that is, the cult of war, is created by two conditions, intense international pressure and the existence of an aristocratic caste. In Europe both exist, consequently there are great armies and a war philosophy.

Traditionally, the only trades open to the aristocracy are war and government. But in peace there are not enough places in government while war is the "business" of the nobility. The influence of the aristocratic class with its code of honor and valor creates the atmosphere necessary to militarism. It is the royalists and Bonapartists who keep alive what militarism there is in republican France, and militarism there has steadily diminished as republicanism established itself.

To fear militarism in America is only possible to those who either do not know militarism or do not know America. In a country devoted to civil pursuits, intensely interested in trade, liberal in its social and political conditions, excessively individualistic and humanitarian, the cult of war has never sprung and could not survive.

If our internal and external conditions change radically in the course of some generations militarism may become a danger. Now it is a nightmare raised by secretaries of peace societies to frighten the ingenuous and spur the sentimental.

To accept the present evils and dangers of military defenselessness rather than incur the evils of a possible militarism of the future is a grotesque inversion of caution. That is rather like jumping off a bridge for fear it will rain.

We commend to all our readers, whether they have fallen under the influence of extremist pacifists or not, a perusal of the striking appeal for preparedness published on this page today. The distinguished author of this appeal cannot be suspected of militarist sympathies even by the most fanatical. On the contrary, Dr. Henderson is known in America and in Europe as a humanitarian of the best type. The robust patriotism, the sanity and the courageous foresight of his remarks on the national defense are characteristic, and THE TRIBUNE hopes their expression will induce other men of public influence to interest themselves in this neglected question.

CAN VIRTUE BE TOO SEVERE?

It was the good fortune of a train porter, who, having caroused immoderately for two days and nights and being, for punishment of his sins, brought into court, to have a Milwaukee judge sit upon his demerits. In Milwaukee would be found the Solomonic wisdom which released the porter in time to catch his car out.

The porter, prior to his headlong jump into the estate of inebriety, had been assigned to the special train of Mr. William Jennings Bryan, and his sole excuse for his immoderate bout with the demon rum was grape juice. In his simple way, as a child of nature, he explained to the court that intemperance was not his habit, but that association with the virtues had reacted in the line of rebellion.

Grape juice became a terrible ideal, which sternly rebuked all the conscious weaknesses of his flesh and a depraved contrariety suggested not a struggle to make his simple life meet the approval of that ideal but a dash for some path of iniquity which would lead him away from the too stupendous presence of that virtue.

This, it might be thought, despairingly, would lead to pessimism, but despair is unnecessary. Contact with an exemplar ought to inspire the desire for the higher life, but the little lesson for all virtue is that it ought not to make itself too impressive. Mr. Bryan and his moral grape juice would not be too impressive for any of the intellectuals, but for the porter's simple nature they were terrifying.

Virtue must approach the children of sin gently. Otherwise it scares them and they flee its presence and go into paths of unwonted evil.

WILL THE SPHINX STRIKE?

Germany's endeavor to find a dissolvent for the British empire was manifest first in South Africa and then in the Mussulman countries. If the nationalistic ambitions of such lands as India and Egypt were more definite and inspired a following as well as a leadership the intervention of the Ottoman power as the leader of Islam might be the signal for the uprising. But if this be the German hope it seems to have been exaggerated.

Will Egyptian nationalists welcome Turkish aid to obtain independence? Moslems constitute approximately 90 per cent of the population. Unlike India, Egypt presents virtual religious unity, and the fellahin, the peasantry, and native townsmen are known to respond to only one incentive to war, and that is religious enthusiasm.

Even to this they respond sluggishly and to others not at all.

Of the fellahin it has been said that they might be made into good soldiers if they ever wanted to kill anybody. They are strong, simple, and hard working. By various stern expedients Mehemet Ali organized 250,000 of them into a conquering army and made them effective against the Turks in the first and second Syrian wars, but when he began conscripting them, after the effort to use Sudanese had failed, the peaceful fellahin, to avoid service, blinded and maimed themselves.

The resourceful Mehemet Ali formed battalions of men who were one-eyed and who had to shoot from the left shoulder. In the end he got an army, and when the Sultan Mahmud refused to turn Syria over to Egypt Mehemet Ali put the Ottoman empire in danger by revolting and by destroying the Turkish armies sent against him.

The fellahin could fight, but did not like it, and required the constant support of a man like Mehemet Ali to maintain an effective military establishment.

In 1839 Egypt, virtually an independent power, almost destroyed the Ottoman leadership in Islam and might have done so if the European powers, with the exception of France, had not intervened.

The fellahin, released from the urgence of a captain when Mehemet Ali died, gradually returned to their peaceful pursuits and to their unwarlike nature.

They had been under many conquerors and had been intolerantly and barbarously ruled by many aliens—Albanians, Turks, Mamelukes, and various peoples of Europe. The native Egyptian is not influenced by the stirrings of national consciousness. The leaders of the nationalistic movement may attempt violence against the governing class, but the fellahin want their uncertain comforts guarded and wars for ideas may be carried on by other people.

Since the British occupation greater security of life has been obtained, and the least genuinely restless people under any mild form of subjugation are the native Egyptians. Such religious incentive to war as an intolerant overlord might arouse by interference is missing under the tolerant British supervision, and if the mass of the Egyptian people be restless the evidence is lacking.

As between the loose reined British rule and the possible rigorous Turkish rule, choice offers no exceptional advantage in favor of the Turk. Islam accepts Turkish hegemony doubtfully. The Arabs frequently need the attention of the Turkish armies. War in the Yemen was stopped only by the invasion of north Africa by the Italians and the consequent war against the Turks.

The Ottomans are not loved in Islam. We doubt that the Turks can call many converts from among the Moslems to a holy war. The Moslems find religious tolerance when their overlords are, to their understanding, infidels, and, gaining no greater freedom of religion under the Turks, acquire only governmental incompetence or governmental abuses.

The British went into Egypt only to restore order, restore the power of the khedive, and put down the Arab revolt. They have remained in spite of assurance and, at first, without definite policy other than that definite policy of the British to hang to what they get.

In the development of Africa, which is to be the marvel of the next hundred years and which this war may affect tremendously, the retention of Egypt is necessary to British plans. Gladstone's cabinet did not know what to do with Egypt. Moral consideration demanded a meeting of moral obligations and stated obligations, but the British blundered along, sustaining, with qualms of conscience, the general rule of the British empire: Get and keep.

Africa has revealed itself since then. Asquith's government knows more than Gladstone's. The fellah is the same creature, little restless when his small comforts are considered. Germany's question is: Will the Sphinx strike?

OUR NATIONAL MINERAL RESERVE.

[From the American Review of Reviews.]

The United States is not only the world's greatest producer of mineral wealth, but it possesses by far the greatest known reserves of any nation, in most of the important minerals. This is one of the things that has made us great, and which is destined to make us far greater as measured by world standards. In some instances, such as coal, and oil, and phosphate rock, and radium ore, the United States possesses more than all the other known deposits of the world, and the only essential minerals of the first rank of which the United States has no known supply at all commensurate with its needs are nitrates, potash salts, tin, nickel, and platinum. The very emphasizing of this fact by the cutting off of importations may result in the discovery and development of these minerals. But as it stands today no other nation in the world so nearly approaches absolute independence in respect to mineral resources, notwithstanding the vast magnitude of our home consumption.

The European war may curtail the production and exportation of some American minerals, but it will result in developing at home many others which we import and in establishing new industries on a permanent basis. When the foreign countries emerge from their struggle and seek to regain the American markets for these products they will find the markets occupied, established on a firm American footing, and they will never regain them.

ALTHOUGH the Stewards of the English Jockey club have decided to refrain from the discontinuance of racing, in connection with the war, owing to the large number of people who would be thrown out of employment thereby, nevertheless the racing world in England has been hard hit by the international conflagration.

While several prominent owners of racing stables are preparing to retire from the turf, there are a still greater number who are arranging to reduce their studs, owing to largely diminished incomes. On the continent, of course, particularly in France, Austria, Germany, and Russia, horse racing has been suspended.

The Stewards of the English Jockey club deserve much credit for their endeavors to continue the meetings as long as is possible.

As they constitute what may be described as the supreme tribunal in everything that relates to the turf, a tribunal from whose decision there is no appeal, and as they may also be regarded as the one court of honor in the British realm for the hearing of those offenses which, while not a violation of the law of the land, constitute infractions of the unwritten laws of honor governing social life, it may be as well to mention that, according to the recent election, they consist of Lord Lonsdale, Lord Harewood, and Sir John Thursby.

The last known of the triumvirate on this side of the Atlantic is Sir John Thursby, the second baronet of his line, a man of about 55, and a Conservative.

One of the greatest colliery proprietors in Lancashire, and possessed of very large estates in Hampshire, in Forfarshire, and above all in Lancashire, where his family has been settled at Ormerod House for generations, he inherited a large racing stable from his fine old father, who as high sheriff for Lancashire in 1887, received a baronetcy on the occasion of Queen Victoria's golden jubilee.

His son, the present baronet, has also been high sheriff of Lancashire, an office which has been held in turn by his grandfather and great-grandfather. He is a strapping, big man, over six feet tall, is devoted to all sorts of outdoor sports, was reared, like his father before him, at Eton, and at Trinity college, Cambridge, is a member of the bar, differing in this respect from his father, who was a soldier by profession, and is president of the British Chess federation.

Curiously enough, although the Thursby racing stable is one of the best known in the country, neither Sir John nor his father has never won any of the big events, save the Ascot cup.

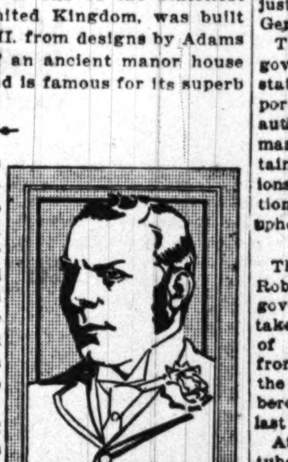
As for Lord Harewood, head of the house of Lascelles, he has already served several terms as Steward of the English Jockey club, and his authority on the continent, especially in France and in Austria, on all matters relating to the turf is almost as great and unquestioned as in his native land. Like Sir John Thursby, he is a striking looking personality, with closely cropped pointed beard, betraying in his manner and in his bearing his former connection with the army—as an officer of the Grenadier Guards.

The family of Lascelles is one of the oldest in Yorkshire, where it has held prominent rank and enjoyed great prestige ever since the reign of Edward I., seven centuries ago. The earldom, however, is of relatively modern origin, having been created a little over a hundred years ago, in favor of Edward Lascelles, who was the intimate friend of Maria Theresa's son, Emperor Joseph II.

The latter presented to the first Lord Harewood some tokay vines, which the earl planted in 1783 at Harewood House, his place in Yorkshire, and which, alone of their kind in the United Kingdom, still yield a large quantity of delicious grapes each year. The first Lord Harewood inherited a vast fortune from his father and uncle, amassed by them in the West Indies.

The present earl still retains the family estates in the West Indies, and it is from them that came the superb big mahogany double doors, nearly a hundred pairs of them, that constitute one of the features of Harewood House.

The latter, standing in an immense park of several thousand acres, is one of the statellest country seats in the United Kingdom, was built in the reign of George III. from designs by Adams and Carr on the site of an ancient manor house known as Gawthorpe, and is famous for its superb painted ceilings.



The Lascelles are as clannish as they are numerous, and thanks to this and to matrimonial alliances with other great houses command considerable influence in English life; influence of a social and political order, as well as in everything relating to sport.

The present Duke of Devonshire's mother is a Lascelles, and so too is Lady Spring-Rice, the British ambassadress at Washington, whose father, Sir Frank Lascelles, for so many years represented his country as ambassador at Berlin, where, gifted, witty, a universal favorite, he exercised greater influence upon the kaiser than any other envoy accredited to the latter's court.

With regard to Lord Lonsdale, the third of the triumvirate of Stewards of the English Jockey club, he is so well known in this country that the briefest mention will suffice. As president and principal organizer of the great international horse show at Olympia for a number of years he has come prominently before the American public.

While he has never achieved any success on the turf, he is in appearance, manner, and tastes quite the horsiest member of the upper house. What he does not know about a horse is not worth knowing, and as master of the hounds he won so much note, both at home and abroad, that hunting people came from Austria, from Hungary, from Italy, from Germany, and from France to watch him at work and to study what was rightly considered to be absolute perfection in the management and maintenance of a hunt.

Champion boxer of the house of lords, an Arctic explorer in his younger days, with plenty of big game shooting to his record, he never quite forgets the manner in which he was cold shouldered in New York when he came to America a quarter of a century ago at the head of a theatrical enterprise; and it is to this that some people are disposed to ascribe the relentlessness with which he prosecuted Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt, the elder, on one occasion for colliding with his motor near Ascot, appearing in court against her, denouncing her there most vigorously, and securing her conviction and fine for reckless driving.

THE COW QUESTION.

WITH this caption the Illinois Tuberculosis society heads its informing pamphlet dealing with the question of tuberculosis in cows. The society exists to fight tuberculosis in the human subject. Naturally it is interested in every cause which contributes to human tuberculosis. The statement is often made that tuberculosis in cows does not contribute to human tuberculosis. Many ordinary, everyday, fair minded people have heard these statements. They want to know what the facts are.

In Illinois the question is acute just now. The Wisconsin Supreme court upheld the Milwaukee ordinance, and Milwaukee proceeded to enforce it. Many tubercular cows had to be got rid of. The cow dealers in the Chicago dairy district became unusually active. On account of the laxity of the commonwealth authorities most states of the union had placed restrictions on the importation of dairy cows from Illinois.

To meet the situation Gov. Dunne issued a proclamation on Nov. 12, 1913, prohibiting the importation into Illinois of tubercular milch cows. The tuberculin test was ordered. This proclamation became effective on Jan. 1, 1914. On Aug. 22, 1914, United States Secretary of Agriculture D. F. Houston issued rule 10, placing the Chicago district under quarantine on Oct. 1, 1914.

Some of the dairymen, instigated by the cow buyers, are resisting these governmental activities. They have passed resolutions and appointed committees to wait on Gov. Dunne and Secretary Houston.

In these resolutions, in articles appearing in the papers, and in public speeches, there appear many statements to the effect that tuberculosis in cows is of no importance; that it does not cause tuberculosis in the human subject; that the milk from tubercular cows is good for inmates of boys' homes; that the tuberculin test is not reliable; that it causes tuberculosis; that it ruins the cow for dairy purposes, and sundry allegations besides.

It is readily understood that the question is acute. These everyday, plain, fair-minded citizens want to know what are the facts. To the mind of the Tuberculosis society the burden of proof is on the other side. So long as it is accepted that the tubercle bacillus causes human tuberculosis and also bovine tuberculosis, the burden of proving that the disease in cows does not contribute to the disease in humans is for the other side to prove.

To the ordinary everyday man it should be good judgment to rout out an enemy, wherever he is found. But the other side does not argue. It merely asserts. It does not claim to know nor to be in a position to prove or argue. Therefore, the defenders of human lives and health find themselves compelled to answer these flat assertions.

Fortunately, at the present time the subject has been carefully and thoroughly studied and opinion has crystallized.

The statement is made that the whole proposal is the result of the activities of political doctors, self-seeking veterinarians and dishonest men, and that for it there is no weight of authority.

ANSWER: The subject was taken up by the German government. That government appointed a commission composed of the ablest men in the empire. The commission spent seven years in investigating. It reported in an unequivocal manner sustaining every point made in favor of tuberculin testing and upholding the opinion that tubercular cows cause human tuberculosis.

The English government appointed a commission composed of the best qualified men in the British empire. After seven years' study they reported the same conclusions as did the German commission.

The New York health department began its study of the question at the same time. The report of Park and Krumweide is just as strong as that of the English and German commissions.

The United States government, every government in Europe, and the different state governments are on record as supporting the position taken by the Illinois authorities. The matter has been before many courts. It has always been sustained. Four strong Supreme court opinions have been given upholding the position directly, and several other opinions uphold it by inference.

The statement has been made that Prof. Robert Koch was against the side of the government and in favor of the position taken by the cow dealers. The backbone of the opposition is based on extracts from a speech made by Prof. Koch before the fourth international congress on tuberculosis. Fortunately, Prof. Koch's last word on this subject is available.

At the sixth international congress on tuberculosis he read a paper and then participated in an extensive conference on this subject. His closing words in his discussion before the congress were as follows:

"Why should I object to the statement that I recognize the transmissibility of bovine tuberculosis to man? I have never denied it."

ASSERTION: Tuberculosis in cows does not cause tuberculosis in the human subject.

ANSWER: The imperial German commission reported that of eighty-four children examined by them, twenty-one, or 25 per cent, had derived their infection from bovine sources.

The British royal commission reported as follows:

"Adult human beings can be infected with the bovine type, even the pulmonary form of the disease in man being sometimes caused by the bovine tubercle bacillus. In the interest, therefore, of infants and children, the members of the population whom we have proved to be especially endangered, and for the reasonable safeguarding of the public health generally, we would urge that existing regulations and supervision of milk production and meat preparation be not relaxed."

Drs. Park and Krumweide of the New York health department estimated that at least 300 children died every year in New York from bovine tuberculosis. Dr. Hess of New York City found that out of 107 samples of milk obtained from 107 dealers, seventeen contained tubercle bacilli, showing that 16 per cent of the milk on the open market could produce tuberculosis.

The most recent estimate is that of Dr. Lawrason Brown of Saranac Lake. He considers it certain that 8 per cent of all cases of tuberculosis that we see are of bovine origin.

Dr. Tonney of the Chicago health department reported that for 1910 the total number of samples examined showed 8.9 tubercle bacilli. These were all in the raw samples, as the pasteurized showed none.

Dr. F. S. Churchill, president of the board of the Children's Memorial hospital of Chicago, reports that the records of surgical tuberculosis for the year 1913 showed that there were sixty-four operations on bone and joint tuberculosis.

ASSERTION: The dairy cows are healthy.

ANSWER: In bulletin 56, United States public health service, "Milk and Its Relation to the Public Health," we find that "Mohler estimates that probably 25 per cent of all the cows which supply milk to the District of Columbia are tuberculous."

ASSERTION: The tuberculin test is unreliable.

ANSWER: Bureau of animal industry circular No. 175 gives the report of the international commission on the control of bovine tuberculosis, from which the following is extracted:

1. That tuberculin, properly used, is an accurate anud reliable diagnostic agent for the detection of active tuberculosis.

2. That tuberculin may not produce a reaction under the following conditions:

(a) When the disease is in a period of incubation.

(b) When the progress of the disease is arrested.

(c) When the disease is extensively generalized.

The last condition is relatively rare and may usually be detected by physical examination.

3. On account of the period of incubation and the fact that arrested cases may sooner or later become active, all exposed animals should be retested at intervals of six months to one year.

4. That the tuberculin test should not be applied to any animal having a temperature higher than normal.

5. That any animal having given one distinct reaction to tuberculin should thereafter be regarded as tuberculous.

6. That the subcutaneous injection of tuberculin is the only method of using tuberculin for the detection of tuberculosis in cattle which can be recommended at the present time.

7. That tuberculin has no injurious effect on healthy cattle.

ASSERTION: The tuberculin test has no legal standing.

ANSWER: Opinion of the New Jersey Supreme court, decided June 6, 1911:

THE USE OF THE TUBERCULIN TEST.

It must be conceded that where, as in this case, the board of health makes the determination of the existence of disease depend upon a special method of diagnosis that method must be, if not the most reliable, as reliable as any.

The existence of disease is necessarily to some extent, a matter of opinion or inference from established facts. The most skillful veterinarian may err. The most reliable symptoms may be deceptive, and absolute accuracy in diagnosis cannot be looked for.

To demand it is a counsel of perfection not adapted to the exigencies of everyday life. Perfection of that degree is not attained under the diagnosis of human diseases, where the physician has the advantage of a patient able to state subjective symptoms and give a history of the complaint. All that can be fairly required in the determination of the fact of disease is that the method of diagnosis should be well recognized, thoroughly approved, and as reliable as any.

We find that the tuberculin test is the most reliable method of diagnosis of tuberculosis in cattle now known; that, while it is not perfect, the percentage of error is as small as in any method suggested, and that it is more accurate than the method by physical examination. We rest this conclusion not merely upon the testimony in the case, but upon the fact that it has been approved by judicial decision in Minnesota, Louisiana, Wisconsin, and Pennsylvania. State vs. Nelson, 66 Minn., 166; 68 N. W., 106; Nelson vs. Minneapolis, 127 N. W., 445; City of New Orleans vs. Charouleau, 121 Louisiana, 890; 46 Southern Rep., 911; Adams vs. Milwaukee, 129 N. W., 518; Limber vs. Meadville in Crawford Common Pleas, Pennsylvania, and adopted by the most recent statute in Delaware, Indiana, Maryland, Michigan, Minnesota, New Mexico, North Dakota, Oregon, Pennsylvania, South Carolina, Tennessee, Washington, and Wisconsin, and for some purposes by Maine, Massachusetts, and Vermont. The "tuberculin test" referred to in the act of South Dakota is probably the same.

A similar act was passed by our own legislature in 1899.

The pamphlet in question draws attention to the following bill passed by the Illinois legislature in 1911:

DAIRY ANIMALS—TUBERCULIN TEST.

1. What unlawful and void relative to tuberculin test for dairy animals. [House bill No 55. Filed June 12, 1911.]

An act to prohibit the establishing and enforcing of the tuberculin test for dairy animals by any city, village, incorporated town, county, or other corporate authority in the state of Illinois.

Section 1. Be it enacted by the people of the state of Illinois, represented in the general assembly: That it shall be unlawful for any city, village, incorporated town, county, or other corporate authority in the state of Illinois by ordinance, rule, or regulation other than may be established by the law of this state, to demand, fix, establish, or require the tuberculin test to be applied to dairy animals as a means or measure of regulating and purifying milk, skimmed milk, cream, and dairy products of said animals in any manner whatever, and every such ordinance, rule, bylaw, or regulation heretofore or hereafter passed, demanded, fixed, established, or required by any such city, village, incorporated town, county, or other corporate authority other than the state of Illinois, is hereby declared to be void and of no effect.

Filed June 12, 1911.

The governor having failed to return this bill to the general assembly during its session, and having failed to file it in my office, with his objections, within ten days after the adjournment of the general assembly, it has thereby become a law.

Witness my hand this 12th day of June, A. D. 1911.

JAMES A. ROSE,
Secretary of State.

This law takes from the people the right to govern themselves. The plain, ordinary, every-day, fair minded citizen will see from the above that tuberculosis in milk causes a considerable part of the consumption death rate and also is responsible for glandular tuberculosis, scrofula, and bone tuberculosis, for example, hunchback; that the best method of detecting tuberculosis is the tuberculin test. It is the method approved by scientists, administrators, and by courts.

The legislature of Illinois has taken from the people the right to use this test to protect their lives, to shield their children against deformity. Less than twenty cow dealers, controlling less than 5,000 dairymen living in five counties, have taken the right of local self-government from 5,000,000 people living in 102 counties.

The cow question then, as the Illinois Tuberculosis society sees it, involves the larger question: Shall twenty people deny the right of self-government to 5,000,000 people?

The Duty of Preparedness.

BY CHARLES RICHMOND HENDERSON, D. D., PH. D.

Head of the department of ecclesiastical sociology, University of Chicago, editor of the American Journal of Theology, editor of the American Journal of Sociology, etc., etc.

WE have no reason to abandon in this terrible hour our confidence in the ultimate triumph of reason and justic; nor to surrender to the detestable doctrines of Machiavelli and his contemporary disciples; nor to look for our deities in Valhalla, in a world "beyond good and evil." Our first and supreme duty as a people is to deserve peace; to avoid every just occasion for attack; to be fair to our own workingmen, to Japan, and to China. No pacifist has ever stated that obligation too strongly.

But the American people have recently been startled into consideration of a reality which they have not faced before since the awful years of the war for the union and for liberation of our slaves. We have been taught to trust in the ocean; the Emden, the Karlsruhe, and other swift men of war, shelling Madras, Calcutta, and threatening other ports, have destroyed that delusion.

We have trusted to treaties of civilized nations, and now we are told by the highest authorities that good faith and honor are the reliance of weaklings and fools, when "interest" calls for treachery and destruction. We have been taught by certain brilliant economists that the bankers of the great financial centers would stop war by refusing credits; and the money princes of conquered cities are hostages for the payment of enormous ransoms, while the bankers of Paris, Berlin, and London obey the commanders of armies without protest or power to lift a little finger.

We have been taught by the present horrors that we can rely on no power but our own. We love Tolstoi and the Friends for their amiable dispositions and their ideals for the future, but at the same time we set steel bars before our windows and arm the police to protect us from burglars and assassins. Each man must adjust his theology to the facts as well as he can, and the mystery is confusedly baffling; but facts must be counted if we are to have a philosophy which will actually prevent unscrupulous ruffians from ruling the world.

We have, as educated people, learned to trust experts, as physicians, engineers, legal advisers, investors; but we have not only distrusted our military specialists, we have permitted them to be defamed and covered with opprobrium. The only men who really knew how strong a navy and army were needed have begged for a hearing in vain. The danger now is that we shall rush to another extreme and accept a policy of imperial conquest. Hope lies in heeding moderate, sane counsels. One thing is sure as daylight: We must be a nation in arms; our youth must be taught the necessity of sacrifice; we must surrender part of our wealth, comfort, leisure, luxury, and sport to the demands of patriotism; we must put a powerful citizen soldiery under discipline of trained soldiers.

Then, and then only, will the territory, the institutions, and the civilization which we inherited from soldier ancestors be secure. Then only will peace be guaranteed.

We have no revenge to wreak on any people; we are not land hungry for a "place in the sun"; we respect the rights of weaker peoples. But it would be better to sell the Panama zone, the Philippine islands, and Hawaii for a song to any nation which can defend them than to hold them without power to protect them, so inviting invasion, humiliation, and ruin. With San Francisco, Seattle, Boston, Charleston, New York, and New Orleans at the mercy of a first class power, we are recreant to our trust, and mistake cowardice for moral ideals, if we fail to heed the call of our army and navy, on which at present we are imposing a duty which they cannot fulfill. There is yet time to awake from our dream of smug comfort and insure our peaceful and unquestioned possession of the lands our ancestors paid for with courage, toil and the full measure of devotion. If our government, after a scientific investigation, asks every tenth young man, selected by lot, to prepare for their national defense, and distributes equitably the economic burden, we can count on a response worthy of our history. But so long as great teachers continue to lull us all into a false confidence, the forces of danger are arming against us, and our youth are drugged into the same unnatural slumber. Without questioning the noble motives of such teachers, their influence is that of the disloyal, of public enemies, and must be sharply challenged by those who would give justice a sword, as well as an olive leaf, for national protection.

FIGHTING THE WAR GERM.

Chicago, Nov. 2.—[Editor of The Tribune.]—Your editorial on "War and American Policy" was splendid in that it held up the ideal of a "federation of peace" rather than armaments as a means of attaining world security. Your editorial of a few days before advocating the abolition of secret diplomacy was a 42-centimeter shell.

Of the three great scourges of history—pestilence, famine, and war—the first two have been conquered—pestilence by the world democracy of science, and famine by the world democracy of sympathy. Wars, like diseases, spring from well known causes. The great task that lies before the virile fighting men of the world is to destroy the causes of wars. Most of these have their breeding places in those surviving medieval modes of thought and action which cannot be squared with democracy and Christianity. Peace, like health, is the ideal; war is the opposite, Von Bernhardi to the contrary notwithstanding. How shall we attain the ideal? By dreaming, thinking, talking, and writing about it; by planning, building, sacrificing, and fighting for it.

SAYS COPPER CONTRABAND IS FRAMEUP.

Seattle, Wash., Nov. 2.—[Editor of The Tribune.]—I have seen by the papers that several of our boats loaded with copper and leaving for certain European ports are held up by English ships and conducted to English harbors. The English government, after keeping them long enough to unload the copper, allows them to return to the United States and pays for the copper and other expenses. That this is a put-up job between the copper magnates and the English government is my firm opinion. These unscrupulous men who, during the time of peace, have exported their goods under foreign flags are now using the flag of the United States to promote their own selfish interests. As soon as Germany finds out this scheme of selling copper to England in this fashion she probably will make an attempt, if she can, to check it. This would mean trouble between Germany and the United States, as some senators have expressed the opinion that although these enterprises are for selfish interests, yet the government of the United States will not allow the American flag to be insulted.

I quote from the Seattle Post-Intelligencer:

"Sir Cecil Spring-Rice states that the British government will inquire into each case separately. If the cargo is destined for ultimate consumption by a neutral country the ship will be released. If the ultimate destination is for a belligerent country the British government will purchase the copper. He also advises American shippers that if they obtain from the consular representatives of the neutral countries concerned a declaration that the cargoes will not be shipped to a belligerent after arrival matters will be simplified.

"The American Smelting and Refining company declares that the British government has aimed a blow at the American copper trade, that it is 'a case of restraint of trade by a foreign government,' and that the price offered by the British government is below the market rate."

HARD TIMES IN ARGENTINA.

Chicago, Nov. 4.—[Editor of The Tribune.]—The following is an extract from a letter received by me. A. E. S.

Observatory La Platte, Argentina, S. A., Sept. 15.—The war has put a hard finish on this country. No money; four years' poor crops. No one can get trusted for anything. Potatoes are $3 a bushel in gold. Everything in food line same proportion. One hundred dollars in North American gold is worth $260 in Argentina paper. I would not be surprised if all public institutions were closed in a short time. Steamship passage advanced 20 per cent. Sentiment strongly anti-German. Mails all delayed.

IRISH ARE LOYAL IN GREAT BRITAIN

Descendants of Emigrants in the Famine Year Fight for England.

50,000 ARE IN ARMS.

BY T. P. O'CONNOR.

LONDON, Oct. 22.—It is not realised, perhaps, even by many Irishmen, what a large and powerful section of their race is settled in Great Britain. In round numbers they amount to 2,000,000. They represented, between sixty and seventy years ago, the very poorest section of even the poverty stricken Irish nation of those unhappy times. When the great famine of 1846 drove so many millions out of their native country, those who were able to command even a small capital went to the United States or to Australia; but those who were driven to their last half sovereign had to take the shorter and cheaper passage to England, Wales, and Scotland.

These refugees, flying from hunger and from cholera, without training of minds or of hands, had to accept the first and the worst conditions that are presented to foreign and unskilled labor in every land. They went to the chemical works, to the gas works, to the docks. Naturally they created some resentment among English workingmen, whose wages their arrival tended to lower by the competition of starvation: and Lancashire is today largely Tory, even among some of the workingmen, because of this old resentment toward the inconvenient Irish immigrant.

Suffered Religious Persecution.

For a generation those Irish exiles in Great Britain had to suffer not merely the hardship of overwork for bad wages but also a good deal of contumely and even of persecution. Another factor in the dislike they produced was their religion; and, after the manner of their uncompromising racial temperament, they took no pains to conceal their religious convictions. Poor though they were, the first thing they did wherever they came was to build out of their pence a Catholic chapel and then a Catholic school. Sometimes they were even hunted through the streets; sometimes their chapels were attacked; a popery lecturer named Murphy created religious riots in several great cities, and in the advertisements of the papers asking for servants the words "No Irish need apply" constantly recurred.

But the Irishmen everywhere fight, with time and their native resolution on their side, and in the next generation they had begun to improve their position in Great Britain. Then came, with the third generation, that wondrous new development in the relations between England and Ireland when Mr. Gladstone took up the Irish cause and devoted to it all his commanding genius, his restless energy, his indomitable will, and his tremendous influence over his countrymen. At once the Irish in Great Britain made a big step in advance. There came a new race of immigrants in the shape of doctors and young barristers; and some of the children of the poverty stricken immigrants — among whom should be counted the greatest of them, Michael Davitt—took advantage of the new system of education which England had so tardily established.

Captured by Irish Girls.

In some parts of the country the Irish were so numerous that they began to intermingle with the native population; this was especially the case in the mining districts. Mining, like all dangerous occupations, has a tendency to unite men, even of different creeds and races, and the Irishmen in the mining districts of Scotland and of the north of England began soon to find English wives, and Englishmen were captured by Irish girls. In these districts the instinctive talent for political movement of the Irishmen began to assert itself, and soon Irishmen were chosen as the chiefs of the miners' trades unions. Wherever there were miners all racial hostility gradually disappeared. In more recent years the Irishmen have also attained a high place in the councils of the Labor party; three are members of that party in the house of commons; and Irishmen have over and over again presided at the annual conference of the trades unions.

The Irishman in Great Britain is, if anything, more fervently nationalist than the Irishman who has never left Ireland. I have often been touched to see their annual convention where men, nine out of ten of them of the working classes, have paid their subscriptions, which often reached a total of £4,000 to £5,000 a year, for no other possible motive than their devotion to their country, without such rewards as came, for instance, to the millions of Irish farmers whom the Irish movement has raised from paupers and serfs to peasant proprietors.

Racial Antagonism Lost.

And yet, though thus fervently and unselfishly Irish, these Irishmen in Great Britain do differ somewhat from their countrymen at home. It is partly, of course, because through their residence in Great Britain they have the advantage of understanding British character and British politics in a way impossible to the untraveled Irishman. They get on so well with the Englishman and Scotchman as a rule that they lost long ago the old feeling of racial antagonism, and since Gladstone's movement brought them into close alliance with the democracy their influence has been sought, and they have in many cities reached all the municipal offices that the electorate could bestow.

Enthusiastic for the War.

I presided at a meeting a short time ago of representative Irishmen from all parts of Great Britain, and I was astounded when I heard the story these delegates told me of the feeling among the Irishmen in the different parts of the country. The feeling in favor of the war was unanimous, a score of Sinn Feiners in three cities—amounting to nothing in numbers and less in influence and mainly, by the way, government employés—excepted. What was more remarkable was the story of the numbers of the Irishmen who had gone to the front or enlisted themselves in Kitchener's army which will go to the front later on. The recruiting had been especially strong in Scotland. One Irishman ventured on the observation, which I almost hope is inaccurate, that in the mining villages in his district three Irishmen had joined for every one Englishman.

From Glasgow alone between 5,000 and 10,000 Irishmen had gone. Even some of the Irish students in the Glasgow university threw up their books and their classes and enlisted. In some parts of the country the newspapers are publishing lists of those who went to the war; all the lists contain a large number of Irish names.

The Debt to France.

By Robert Herrick.

SINCE the outbreak of the war there has been much talk about the claims of various national "cultures." Professors and writers—especially the Germans—have labored to establish the importance of their respective "cultures."

The eager assertion or assumption that one variety of "kultur" is so demonstrably superior to another seems to me ridiculous. The Slav gets the worst of it by German reckoning, and yet I suspect the Slav may have hidden in the depths of his inscrutable soul a finer "kultur" than any the world has achieved.

It may very well be that the spiritual touch of the Slav is the one culture element that Europe most needs today to recrystallize its ancient ferments. That, however, is on the lap of the gods, who seem about to give up more secrets for us moderns to ponder than during many an age past.

This solemn weighing of one culture against another is egotistic and narrow schoolmastery at the best. The things of the spirit cannot be put accurately into debit and credit columns as our German friends are inclined to think. So I shall not add my worthless personal prejudices to this chatter about "kultur."

We can all agree, however, whenever we have received large benefits, to express a fit gratitude. Today I wish to express in part my sense of the debt the whole world owes to France. I will not pedantically enumerate her learning and art and literature, her acute mind and excellent language; but recall merely some of the more personal traits of her lovable self.

La belle France! The term is almost a joke, but always a term of endearment. Or as her people have called her from of old, "La douce France," "gentle France"! For many centuries she has been the generous hostess of all the peoples of the earth, hers the land where in time of youth and hope and joy they would go for their pleasure. She has taught the world true cosmopolitanism—that of the hostess with perfect charm, who nevertheless for all she gives exacts nothing in return. She has remained herself, while tolerating the rest of us.

The English, in spite of their insularity and sluggish sympathies, have spent half their national life within her boundaries. They have never been able to get away from France, however much they disapproved of her. After they had lost their last foothold in French territory they flocked thither as enemies or visitors. Remove Paris from English literature and there would be a gaping wound. It has always been to some economical haven in provincial France that the impoverished English family has withdrawn to recoup themselves, and a holiday for an Englishman is almost synonymous with a trip to Paris. (Who ever thought of going to London for a holiday?)

Even the enemies of France, the Germans, have paid homage to the charm of the Gaul and brought thither their beer and their music. And even the Germans, traditional enemies, in spite of their several humiliating trips down the Champs Elysées, have been courteously welcomed by this incomparable hostess of the world. (But not again for long years, we may expect!)

It is remarkable how little France has ever borrowed from any of these visitors (except their ideas, which she has invariably improved) who have lived in her land in peace and war. She has been sufficient unto herself, content with her own family ways, her own national custom and character. The French have traveled less than other peoples, expatriated themselves practically never, which is a touching tribute to the dearness of their home.

Thus France has preserved more than any other nation an individuality of race; she remains today, in spite of her centuries of hospitality, the least changed, the most unique of civilized nations. Therefore, from any high view of life, they are the one people that the world can spare least of all. For France has a character of its own, preserved with marvelous tenacity through the vicissitudes of her long history. It is the character of an unmixed family inheritance, of a single tradition. It is that which makes both her strength and her weakness today.

Ridiculous, but there it is! France, the French, greet the world with this smiling optimism and the world likes it. They are gay, light hearted, communicative; they have the social sense as no other people have ever had it. One can see the little old woman sitting beside the animated street in her kiosque, the bustle of all Paris about her, selling her miserable damp rags of newspapers, content with the world and her position in it.

It's the same thing in the country at any roadside cabaret, where one lunches more agreeably than at a splendid American hotel, and usually better. Also in the little gray stone towns with their cobbled streets and red roofs, along the straight, poplar lined highways, in the little forests with their delicately branching, leafy trees—the same charm, the same homeliness, the same livableness of life.

These and a thousand more details, none, to be sure, of the greatest importance, but all of intimate charm, make up our memories of France. And we human beings, as I have said, live more upon the little intimacies of life than upon the big inspirations—not that a true lover of France would admit that she lacks these larger inspirations.

That which France has given the strangers who have crowded into her fair country for a thousand years, who have spent there many of the happiest days of their lives is—joy. And this hard working world needs joy more than any other one thing. France has given us more, much more, but it has given preëminently, abundantly, joy—a radiant light to living, a sense of vivid being which we of the strenuous creed especially need. Urbanity, beauty, freedom, the quick wit and the easy smile, these all go to make that joyful charm which this rare hostess offers her guests, however dull they may be.

Living has long been the art of arts to these people. Living, which in our greed or our seriousness or our selfishness, we make so common, the French have lifted to a plane of gayety and beauty. Just living! Eating and drinking, pleasuring and loafing, the petty contacts of the day, they make all these gracious sources of happiness, of memories.

We may go home when our time comes and say to ourselves properly that there is no place like home, no people like our own blood kin; but a smile comes to our lips when we think of France, and a wistful sigh mayhap for those sunlighted days spent there, which will always have something of youth in them.

This charm that springs from the power to give joy, like the charm of the person who can make us live, can quicken our pulses, is precious—incalculably precious. What could make up to the world for its loss? Wealth or learning or efficiency? Never! Not one of these or all of them.

And so there is something sacrilegious in the devastation that is now going on in northern France, far more pitiful than the destruction of a splendid cathedral. The ruin of those gentle fields, those fine old towns, the pressing out on the battlefield of its life blood, is a wanton waste of the world's best treasure, as well as an abominable act of ingratitude towards one who has given of her best generously to all the peoples of the earth.

Possibly enough the nation will emerge from this last trial by fire, strengthened. For a racial type as strong as that of the French cannot be eradicated even by conquest. It is irrepressible. But I fear that it will have lost forever some of its joy giving quality, its lovably eternal youth, its superb sanity and suavity towards life, and that charm of manner and spirit which has made it for all these centuries the incomparable hostess of the world.

Should that happen, nothing—not all the improved "kultur" imaginable—could compensate to us for the light that has gone out. The light that has beckoned the sad and weary and dull to France. The light of Joy!

DRUMMOND JR. READY FOR WAR

LONDON SOCIETY NEWS.

BY LADY MARY.

LONDON, Oct. 29.—When going into the office of a solicitor the other day I met Mrs. Maldwin Drummond and her elder son coming out. He had just been making a will prior to his departure for the front, for although he is not nearly of age he has nevertheless a lot of personal property that had to be accounted for in case of the worst. It seems only the other day that one was writing about him and his brother as little boys and their desire to be in the British service. The second boy was in the United States lately, but he, too, has returned home and is off directly.

Their mother is proud of them, but she is distressed about their departure. When I met her with her elder son she seemed to have as much as she could do to keep from crying, and he had his arm through hers as if to sustain her.

Mrs. Maldwin Drummond has now gone back to Cadland, her husband's place near Southampton. The house is Georgian and spacious like all mansions of that period. The loveliest mezzotints in England are there, of special interest being the one of Lord Nelson, for which fortunes have been offered again and again.

Belgian Princess at Play.

I saw the little Belgian princess, daughter of the king and queen of Belgium with Lady Alexandra Curzon at a picture palace, accompanied by two attendants, the other afternoon. The display was for children, everything of a tragic or doubtful character having been cut out of the display. The children, who are about the same age, chatted now and again in French and appeared to be the best of friends.

As for the princess, she is as merry a little girl as you would find anywhere and is exceedingly pretty, with lovely fair hair. When she insisted on removing her hat, quite an unnecessary attention to those behind her, lest apparently she should obstruct their view, I noticed her hair was tied up American fashion with a big bow of black ribbon on the top, a style in which Lady Alexandra's was also arranged.

Afterward they went on to Marlborough house to have tea with Queen Alexandra and Princess Victoria, who are devoted to Lady Alexandra. She is the goddaughter of her majesty, who has taken the keenest interest in her ever since the death of Lady Curzon. She calls her majesty at her request "godmother," and on her birthday each year she receives a fine amethyst from her majesty to make in time a necklace. The amethyst is Queen Alexandra's favorite stone.

Exodus of Society.

Every one who possibly can is longing for the time to get out of London, and I hear many smart people look forward to going to Monte Carlo, Switzerland, and even Egypt and India by and by.

The United States is also to be a happy hunting ground for many who have relations and friends over there. A troop of Lady "Veta" Brady's (formerly Lady Victoria Pery) friends are going over later. Mrs. Ogden Mills has also invited a large party and so has Mrs. Oliver Belmont. Everybody is restless and nervous. All the smart women with relations at the front are besieged with requests from the fashionable photographers to have their pictures taken, as, of course, these ladies may at any moment be prominently in the public eye through the fame of their mankind.

To Sell Prince Maurice's Cap.

American women are entering into keenest rivalry for the possession of the cap worn by Prince Maurice of Battenberg in the trenches, which is riddled with holes. The men at either side of him, one of whom was Percy Wyndham, were killed. The young Battenberg prince is popular in America, and as this cap is to be sold shortly for one or other of the war funds it is sure to fetch an enormous price.

Never in the annals of fashion have fur coats been as magnificent and costly as they are this autumn, and the furriers are expecting the greatest season of years. As for one thing, the shapes have altered absolutely, which necessitates every smart woman having a new coat or remodeling her old one. One of the most sumptuous fur coats I have seen for a long time was for Lady Ancaster, who was Miss Breese of New York. It was of sable, with the new voluminous skirt, the bodice shaped in 1880 style, and the sleeves put in at the arm hole.

Western Union Life.

W. H. R.—The Western Union Life Insurance company of Spokane has been in business eight years and has had a steady growth. Its last annual report showed $17,013,857 insurance in force, assets $1,345,428, capital $200,000, surplus $200,040. More than half of its assets are mortgage loans drawing 7.9 per cent interest. The company has had an exceedingly low death rate and moderate cost of management. Dividends of 6 per cent are paid to stockholders.

Calgary Bonds.

W. H. M.—The city of Calgary had outstanding some time ago bonds to the amount of 15 per cent of its assessed valuation. Probably the debt is somewhat larger now.

Part of these bonds are for municipally owned public utilities, but all the issues are on the same basis as to security. While this looks like a large debt nothing short of a complete collapse of business and real estate values in Calgary could endanger ultimate payment. Large municipal debts are usual in Canada.

Taxes on Bonds.

M. C. M.—The tax rate in Chicago varies somewhat in different districts. The lowest rate is in the town of Jefferson, 4.93; the highest, Lake View and North Town, 5.64. These rates are levied on one-third of the estimated market value of all property reported for assessment. Holdings of stock of Illinois corporations are exempt. All bonds except United States government bonds are taxable.

A. B., Evanston, Ill.—It is safe to buy stocks from a curb broker if you know him to be a reliable man. The obvious precaution would be to look up his references and his record. American Can preferred and Central Leather preferred are classed by Wall street brokers as "semi-investment" stocks, which means practically that an investment in them would be speculative.

Little Stories of the War.

By James O'Donnell Bennett.

[War Correspondent of The Tribune.]

HIRSON, France, Oct. 3.—Here is one of the favorite stories of the German barrack room and campfire:

Always it begins "Our great Bismarck."

The other hero is called, not "St. Peter," but "Petrus."

"Our great Bismarck," then, is sitting beside Petrus at the gates of heaven, where there come to him tidings of war in Germany. Instantly the prince's eyes are aflame. "Can I go down there?" he asks the saint. "I ought to be there."

Petrus shakes his head.

"You cannot go," he answers, "but you may look."

Bismarck puts his head out of the gate and looks a long time down upon the fatherland in arms.

Slowly he turns back to Petrus.

"It is well," he says. "I have looked. It is not necessary that I go. My spirit is there."

The First Shot.

Six shots from the rifle of a franc-tireur opened the war in Belgium.

This civilian fired from a copse 300 feet west of the German boundary line, and his target was the first German column to enter Belgium. The copse was immediately surrounded by a bicycle squad and the man was found with his smoking rifle in his hands. He was at once "put against the wall." The date was Aug. 4.

These statements were made to me by Maj. Max Bayer, present commander of the German garrison in Brussels. He is a man who weighs every word he speaks, and who twice remarked in the course of the interview, "I don't wish to tell you stories I have heard from others. I will keep to the things I saw." This officer performed distinguished service under Gen. von Trotter during the German operations in southwest Africa. In August he was commandant at Liege. Since Sept 1 he has been in Brussels. He is also chief of the German boy scouts, who are known as pathfinders.

On the morning of Aug. 4, when the first German troops crossed the German frontier into Belgium, Maj. Bayer was at the head of the column. The line of march was along the highway which leads from the frontier to the Belgian town of Herve. Hardly had the boundary line been crossed (by not more than 300 feet, Maj. Bayer would say) when shots rang out from the copse 600 feet ahead of the troops.

"I was greatly surprised," says the major, "that my men seemed to pay no attention to the shots."

When the bicycle corps had surrounded the bit of wood they found a man in civilian garb with his just used rifle still in his hands. He was about 60 years old.

It was when I asked the major what was done with the man that he used the curt phrase which has become a formula—"He was put against the wall."

It was to become a fact of tragic significance that the first shot heard by the invaders in Belgium was fired by a franc-tireur.

"At 6 in the evening of that day [Aug. 4] we reached Herve, leaving there at 3 o'clock the following morning for Liege. At midnight of the 6th of August we reached the outskirts of the town. At 3 o'clock in the morning we were passing between two of the forts. There we lost heavily. By 2 o'clock in the afternoon we were in the town. Meanwhile my baggage train had not come up. 'Donnerwetter!' we were all saying. 'Where is the baggage?' Then news came that civilians in Herve had fired on our baggage train at 5 o'clock of the morning of the 5th, killing twelve men and wounding nine. This was two hours after we had left the town. 'Well,' we said when the news came, 'we will not burn that whole town because of what a few foolish people have done.'

"But when a second column had left Herve the same thing happened to its baggage train. 'These stupid Germans,' the people seemed to be saying, 'they do nothing against us. We can get some more.' But no part of that second column was sent back to punish the town. And so a third time civilians in Herve fired upon one of our baggage trains. Then we destroyed the town.

"These Belgians do not know what war means. From the very first the people of Herve had good warning. On the evening of the 4th when I reached there I took a trumpeter and went to several points to speak to the crowds. I told them that if they kept their place as civilians no harm would come to them, but that firing on the troops would mean the ruin of the town.

"The manner of the entry into Liege was, I think, altogether unprecedented. I have told you that we passed between two of the forts at 3 o'clock of the morning of Aug. 6 and that by 2 o'clock in the afternoon we were inside the town. Subsequently we took one fort after another from the inside of the ring of fortifications. That is the unprecedented thing. Theoretically it was impossible. Any soldier will tell you that. But practically it happened.

"As to the fighting on the 6th—well, I have that day not the feeling of a battle. It was more like a cinematograph. The losses were very heavy. Many of our men fell by grenades and we lost a general, a colonel, and many other officers. But a beginning was made in that work which was theoretically impossible."

It was Maj. Bayer who received probably the first shot fired in the civilian outbreak at Liege on the night of Aug. 20. At 9:30 o'clock he was walking quietly through the streets in the upper part of the town when he heard the report of a shot and felt something graze his leg. Turning, he saw a rifle aimed at him from a cellar window. That night firing began simultaneously at three points along the river—from the houses near the palace of justice, from the university, and from houses near the bridge next to the bridge leading from the university square. Each of the points from which the firing came commanded a bridge and those three bridges were guarded by German troops. The evidence of a preconcerted plan on the part of the civilians was, therefore, considered decisive by the Germans.

La Locandiera.

The pretty little French waitress at Maubeuge who thrice a day served a table full of German officers was about as big as a minute, but she assumed the maternal and admonitory attitude toward her guests before they had been twenty-four hours under her black eyes. She was not afraid of a general; of majors she was merely tolerant, and captains she fairly snubbed when they did not instantly make their wants clear to her.

She had condescended to learn one German word. It was "nichts," which she pronounced "nix," and she used it indiscriminately not only to indicate the lack of a particular viand or beverage but also to express negation, scorn, patience, impatience, acquiescence, and moderate endearment. The curious part was that everybody caught in every instance the shade of meaning she intended to convey.

Nobody dreamed of disputing her on any point.

Although she frequently play-acted pathos and would suddenly droop from extraordinary animation into attitudes of piteous weariness—whimpering the while that she was "tres fatigué"—she was at no time a sucessful emblem of France cowering before the invader. In fact, she ruled the roost, and any commentary she afforded on Mr. Kipling's "Hun at the Gates" was entirely ironical. There was not a Hun at the table who was not in a "Please ma'am" attitude every time she bent her scorching eyes upon him or tapped her foot when she thought he was dallying too long over his soup.

Her sole grievance against the Germans appeared to be that it was annoying to have to reckon the price of a meal in francs and then translate the sum into marks when an officer placed German silver in her hand. But, as the tips were liberal, she bore up even under that trial.

On our last morning at Maubeuge a German officer who was to start out with us on a day's journey by auto said to this domineering creature, "And now, mademoiselle, the cigars."

"I shall not be amazed," she replied, "if there is not a cigar left in this house."

The officer, a huge, bearded fellow of more than fifty years, went "boo-hoo" and put his hands together in appeal.

"Well, well," shrilled the waitress, "don't cry," and she executed two shrugs and three grimaces, combining reproof, sympathy, and impatience.

Then she disappeared.

When she returned she tucked four cigars under the braided cuff of the officer's coat sleeve and said "There they are, big baby!"

The officer grinned and loved it all.

Goldoni, who drew a hundred such pictures of inns in war time, would have loved it, too.

"How Much for Berlin?"

Two German soldiers guarding a bridge on the outskirts of a French village were standing at their ease. From their ruddy complexion and heavy build it was not difficult to see that they were from an agricultural regon. They looked very strong and good natured but not very soldierlike. Suddenly an officer came into view in an automobile and slowed up at the bridge. The two men of the landsturm pulled themselves together and struck an imposing attitude before the officer, their shoulders erect and their more then suspicion of paunch somehow disposed of for the moment. Military etiquette seemed suddenly to have enveloped their huge, awkward frames and hey made a fine show.

The transformation had been effected with capital alacrity, and I could not resist commenting on it.

"Yes," said the officer, "those lads from the farms take their ease when they are unobserved, but give them spectators and they will make an appearance. There is a stock army story of a drill sergeant who was putting recruits from the country through their paces. He was anxious to impress upon them the importance of a good swing and stride in making a fine appearance and this is the way he put it:

"'Every man of you must march through a town as if you had five marks in your pocket and were saying, "How much costs Berlin?" (Wie viel Kostet Berlin?)

WHEAT FUTURES SCORE ADVANCE

FOREIGNERS BUY CORN.

The wheat market finished strong yesterday, although there was an easier tone during the fore part of the session. The reports of big export sales checked the bearish proclivities of local traders, and there was considerable short covering at the close. Resting prices were ¼@⅜c to ⅝c higher. Cash prices were steady relative to futures in all positions, and there was no letup in the demand for wheat.

Sales of wheat here were 540,000 bu, most of which was for export, and the seaboard claimed sales in all positions of 1,200,000 bu. Duluth and Minneapolis wired messages claiming a big inquiry for durum and spring wheats, and Kansas City exporters reported a phenomenal demand for wheat from abroad. Heavy loadings are expected from New Orleans and Galveston the next few weeks, and foreigners continue to buy wheat and flour as fast as offered.

Receipts Are Still Heavy.

So far there is no indication of much decrease in the country movement, although it has been claimed for some time that country arrivals were falling off. Primary receipts for the week aggregated 15,357,000 bu, compared to 7,830,000 bu a year ago, or about double. Northwest receipts for the week were liberal. For the day Minneapolis and Duluth had 904 cars—last year, 852 cars—and Winnipeg had 254 cars, against 1,057 cars a year ago.

Clearances for the day were 805,000 bu. Flour trade reports from Minneapolis indicated a somewhat better domestic flour inquiry, but sales are still moderate. Shipments of flour continue heavy, and it is expected export clearances of flour will be unusually heavy during the coming year, as the foreign demand is urgent.

Good Demand at Liverpool.

Liverpool spot prices were unchanged, but there was a good demand for cargo offerings. The possibility of small Indian shipments, the light Winnipeg receipts, and the unfavorable Argentine and Australian reports were bullish factors abroad. Drought in Australia is still unrelieved in some important wheat sections and wheat losses are said to be irreparable. Receipts here were 342 cars, with 431 cars inspected yesterday.

Buying of wheat was led by Armour on the early break and cash houses took quite a little wheat. Logan-Bryan, Lowitz, Brosseau, and J. Rosenbaum were fair buyers of wheat. Clement-Curtis sold early, but later were buyers. Weather conditions continue mild and generally fine in the northwest. Charters were made for 670,000 bu wheat to Buffalo at 1¼c.

Corn Trade Is Narrow.

The corn trade was not broad, but there was a steady tone, and resting prices were ⅛c to ⅛@¼c higher. Cash prices were steady to ½c higher for new corn in the sample market and old corn was about 1c higher. New corn received so far is of good quality and there is an excellent demand, sales yesterday being 400,000 bu, mostly to exporters. Manufacturing concerns have been fair buyers of new corn also. The good quality of the new corn is expected to insure a big shipping trade, both for domestic and export account, as the old corn is pretty well used up.

Receipts were 178 cars and 141 cars were inspected yesterday. Primary arrivals were 521,000 bu and for the week were 3,127,000 bu, against 2,111,000 bu a year ago. Country sales to arrive were small, but quite a little corn is being consigned.

Hay Embargo Affects Oats.

Six important hay states have been placed under an embargo not to ship hay for the present, and this had considerable influence in the oats market, which gained strength near the close. Final prices were ½c to ½@⅝c higher. The cash demand was not particularly strong, and sales were small, compared to those the trade has become accustomed to, only 180,000 bu being reported taken. No export demand was reported. Cash prices were about ¼c higher. Receipts were 206 cars and 159 cars were inspected yesterday. Primary arrivals were 926,000 bu for the day and for the week were 6,642,000 bu, against 4,871,000 bu a year ago. Country offerings continue light.

Products Show Weakness.

The demand for products was not so urgent as it was the preceding day and there was a sharp reaction from the high prices scored on Friday. The cash trade was fair. Packers were credited with selling products on the hard spots. There was no market at the yards. The fire in the yards at Kansas City did not cause much of a stir in the market. Liverpool cash lard was 1s 3d higher, with meats unchanged. Receipts at western points for the week were 463,900 compared to 454,000 the preceding week and 469,700 a year ago.

EXPORTERS TAKE RYE.

Rye met with a brisk demand at firm to 2c higher prices, with sales of 10,000 bu reported made for export. No. 2 sold at $1.00@1.02 and No. 3 at 99c. Receipts, 5 cars.

Timothy seed was quiet at $3.75@5.25, and clover seed was steady at $10.00@14.00 for cash lots.

Duluth flax closed 3¼@4½c higher, with cash on track $1.48; November, $1.47½; December, $1.48, and May, $1.52½. Receipts, 91 cars. Minneapolis was 4½c higher at $1.46½@1.48½ for cash on track. Receipts, 23 cars. Winnipeg closed 3¼@3⅜c higher, with November $1.27, December $1.26, and May $1.33. Receipts, 10 cars.

NEWS AND GOSSIP OF BOARD OF TRADE.

L. Harry Freeman has just returned from a 3,000 mile trip over the southern cotton belt, covering every state but Texas, and says:

"The problem in cotton is far from solved, although the situation is improving. The 'buy a bale' movement was the very worst thing that could have happened. It simply meant an effort to create a market that did not exist. The average small planter thought it an opportunity to sell his production at 10c a lb. Even if the war had not come on 9c cotton would have been a satisfactory price.

"The 'buy a bale' movement disposed of 100,000 bales out of a 16,000,000 bale crop. However, at present the south has awakened to the fallacy of such a proposition and is hustling to dispose of its goods. The movement so far has amounted to 35 per cent of last year, and I understand Savannah, Ga., alone has chartered twelve steamships for cotton shipments for November.

"Meanwhile the warehouses and streets are crowded with bales. New Orleans is building a $5,000,000 bonded warehouse at the public docks so as to be prepared to handle cotton at a minimum charge and hold for an indefinite period without deterioration."

Sales of wheat for export in all positions yesterday were upwards of 1,200,000 bu. Sales here were close to 600,000 bu, including some worked late Friday. Exporters say that foreigners take everything offered anywhere near the market. A local exporter said there was no limit to the demand. Minneapolis wired that Italy had asked for an offer of 1,000,000 bu No. 2 northern, and Kansas City said there was an enormous demand with big sales. Flour is being taken also in fair lots. Cash prices in all markets continue firm relative to the futures, and No. 1 northern blue stem at Duluth was 2¾@3c over the December, with an excellent demand. Country sales are not so heavy, but there is not much indication so far of a letup in the primary movement, which is about twice as large as a year ago.

"The claim of frost but not resulting wheat damage in Argentina will not stand," says B. W. Snow. "I never yet saw a frost light enough to do no damage when wheat is in head. In 1911 frosts in Santa Fé and Cordoba at the end of October received little publicity and no consideration, but when the crop was harvested the straw was heavy but the yield surprisingly small. This year the same story, 'frost but no damage,' came out of Canada after the frost of Aug. 6, and the fact of such a frost was almost forgotten, but the quality and yield of both oats and of wheat finally showed heavy damage. The fact that Argentina has suffered frost at a critical time in crop growth will show up when the harvest returns are in."

Omaha wired Bartlett-Frazier: "Our wheat receipts are very light and a surprise to the trade. At a number of stations $1.00 is being paid without drawing anything out. They had all stated $1.00 would cause a good movement, but it has failed to materialize."

Michigan farmers marketed 1,500,000 bu wheat in October, according to the state report for November as wired by King of Toledo. Last October only 235,000 bu were marketed. The wheat condition is placed at 95, the same as a year ago. Last crop was 14,000,000 bu, and corn about 62,000,000 bu. Oats crop, 52,000,000 bu. Rye yield was estimated at 5,500,000 bu. The government estimate of the wheat crop was 17,000,000 bu; corn, 60,000,000, and oats, 50,000,000 bu.

Charles Sincere & Co. say: "Our reports from many sections claim 10 to 30 per cent increase in seeded wheat acreage. Part of this is intended for pasturage, as it was last year. Southwest mail advices say much poor corn, which will go to stock feeders, while the better part of the crop is the finest commercial corn in years. Between active feeding and big export sales, practical corn men see a remarkable situation for the year."

New corn in the sample market was steady to ½c up and old corn was about 1c higher. Offerings were moderate and so far the receipts of new corn are showing an excellent quality. The demand was good for corn and sales were 400,000 bu, including 250,000 bu for export. Omaha quoted cash corn ⅛@1c up. St. Louis corn was steady. Oats were ¼c up. Sales were 180,000 bu domestic.

C. E. J. Mitarachi, representing G. P. Bottazzo of Marseilles, France, has been in Chicago the last few days and has bought considerable flour recently for shipment to France. In his opinion grain prices will be much higher later on, but at present thinks the market high enough. He is of the opinion the war will last three years or more.

An embargo has been placed on hay shipments from Wisconsin, Illinois, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Michigan, and Indiana. This is owing to the efforts made to stamp out the foot and mouth disease now prevailing in many sections. There was buying of oats on the strength of the hay embargo.

Weather conditions were reported more favorable in Argentina and France for wheat, but drought continues in big sections in Australia, the loss in New South Wales being reported irreparable.

Duluth November durum wheat sold from $1.20 to $1.22¾ in the last hour of trade yesterday. December durum was up 1¼c to $1.21. There was said to have been a big inquiry for durum wheat.

Rye prices were up sharply again yesterday. No. 2 rye selling at $1.02, or 1½c higher than previous day, and 50,000 bu were reported taken for export.

Liverpool cabled: "The wheat market is quiet, but firm. Parcels are quoted 1½d per quarter higher."

Austrian reports said that, regardless of the suspension of duties, grain prices were again rising.

Duluth wheat stocks increased 1,347,000 bu for the week.

Minneapolis stocks were even up for one day.

COTTON.

NEW YORK, Nov. 7.—There was a large attendance at the cotton exchange again today, and the talk around the floor indicated that the action of the Liverpool market since the reopening for restricted business yesterday had made a favorable impression on sentiment. The English spot market was two points higher at 4.66d, and expectations of an improving export demand were encouraged by reports that Russia had established special credits here which would be used largely for the purchase of cotton. There were also reports from the United States embassy at Berlin indicating that available supplies of cotton at Bremen were practically exhausted and that prices ranged around 15@18c for old crop, with 12c or better offered for new crop cotton. December contracts here sold around 7.55@7.60c on the curb, and local spot brokers said their offers from the south indicated continued firmness in the interior. Practically all necessary signatures are now said to have been obtained to the corporation syndicate agreements, and it was reported on the floor that whatever action might be taken by the courts with reference to the Pell cotton, there would be no interference with the plans for reopening the exchange, which has not been officially announced, but is expected on Nov. 16, for trading in both old and new style contracts. Today's port receipts were 46,601 bales. Exports 28,962, and stock 844,949. Interior receipts were 29,763. New Orleans spot steady, 7 5-16c. Sales, 1,259.

LIVERPOOL, Nov. 7.—COTTON—Spot quiet; prices two points higher. American middling, fair, 5.72d; good middling, 4.97d; middling, 4.66d; low middling, 4.05d; good ordinary, 3.36d; ordinary, 2.86d. Sales, 8,000 bales, including 5,700 American and 500 for speculation and exports. Imports 17,859, including 17,351 American. May and June delivery opened at 4.39d and closed 4.34d.

BANKS RETIRING CERTIFICATES

Local Clearing House Members Begin Paying Debit Balances in Cash.

DROP IN RATES NEAR.

Retirement of clearing house certificates by Chicago banks has begun. There has been no official action by the association calling the certificates in, but some of the banks have begun to pay their debit balances in cash instead of certificates, while one institution is credited with having retired and canceled something over $2,000,000. The total outstanding is roundly $15,000,000, or was a few days ago.

Aldrich-Vreeland notes also are being collected by the banks with a view to their retirement within a relatively short time. The local situation is therefore gradually clearing.

The clearing house certificates form an attractive means of employing bank funds for a short period, since they bear 7 per cent, and banks holding them as against other members are tempted to meet debit balances in cash and retain the certificates.

Money Market Near Break.

The money market appears to be on the verge of a break. Some of the state banks are merely awaiting a little more assurance as to the general situation before entering the commercial paper market. When they do begin to buy the rates will quickly fall.

This change will probably be preceded by repayment of loans held by present borrowers. When the customers of the bank feel it less necessary to keep a considerable credit and begin liquidating the banks will be free to become buyers of paper. With the break in favor of one class of borrowers there will follow a change toward all, since conditions which bring about lower rates in themselves will augment easier tendencies, and when borrowers get over their anxiety and cease to borrow, as it were, the banks begin offering to lend.

Bank Statement Steady.

The New York bank statement indicated a steady position at the end of the week. The changes were not large. Cash increased $1,688,000, while deposits increased $3,364,000. The excess reserve showed an increase of a little less than $1,000,000.

The surplus reserve now stands at $15,914,550, against $7,150,750 last year and $3,940,550 two years ago. The figures:

Louisville Gas Notes.

The Louisville Gas and Electric company, controlled by H. M. Byllesby & Co., is offering $450,000 three and one-half year 6 per cent notes at 97 and interest. The proceeds of the notes are to be used in retiring floating indebtedness and making important extensions and additions. The improvements were all under way when the war began and could not be discontinued.

Pittsburgh Deposits $411,400,000.

Pittsburgh reports that eighty-three out of the total of eighty-six banks and trust companies there show deposits of $411,400,000, being a decrease of about $10,000,000, compared with one year ago.

The Pittsburgh Trust company has issued a statement in connection with large reduction shown in the company's surplus and undivided profits. The management says the obligations of the Pittsburgh and Butler railway have been charged off, as well as a number of small loans. The company has also marked down securities it held, including New York City bonds, New York Central bonds, and Southern Pacific and Pennsylvania railroad stocks.

British Trade Falls Off.

According to the monthly return of the British board of trade, imports of the United Kingdom decreased about $180,800,000 in October while exports decreased $90,000,000, compared with October, 1913.

Decrease in Local Clearings.

Local bank clearings for the week showed a decrease of $44,923,403 or 13.7 per cent compared with the corresponding week last year. A holiday contributed to the decrease. The figures.

COFFEE AND SUGAR.

NEW YORK, Nov. 7.—The coffee market was very quiet again today. The reaction of ⅛c in the rate of Brazilian exchange on London was not accompanied by any change in cost and freight offers, and local dealers claim that prices on the spot here are now well below a parity with primary markets. Some anxiety is also expressed as to the safety of two or three steamers overdue from Brazil, and while buyers are reported to be holding off prices were generally steady at 6⅝c for Rio 7s and 10½c for Santos 4s. Sales of 4,500 bags were reported through the liquidating committee, with December closing at 5.60@5.65c, March at 5.95@6.00c, May at 5.15@5.20c and July at 6.97c. EXPORTS CAUSE GOOD FEELING Effect Extends to Many Lines of Trade, Including Steel.

SECURITIES IN DEMAND.

NEW YORK, Nov. 7.—The hopeful sentiment which developed last week was sustained by various circumstances this week. Chief of these were many evidences of the increasing flood of this country's export trade.

Commerce department officials estimated an October excess of merchandise exports of $60,000,000. Further buying of wheat and other grains for export continued on a sensational scale and cotton shipments to foreign ports expanded to one-third or more of last year's rate. The effect extended to many lines of industry. Even the steel trade felt increased confidence, despite additional contraction of current business.

Exchange Problem Advances.

The international exchange problem advanced sufficiently to end the necessity for further emergency arrangements under discussion by the British treasury delegates in conference at Washington. Credits were reported to be arranged in New York by foreign governments, including Russia and Austria, for expenditure in this country. This detracts from apprehension over gold exports, which are thus certain of an early return flow.

Increased demand for bonds and high grade stocks reflected the growing force of the reservoir of capital accumulating with the bottling up for three months of securities markets. Ending of the British moratorium, government security for London market loans, reopening of the Liverpool cotton association, and prospects of an early reopening of the New York cotton exchange—all these gave impetus to the discussion looking to the reopening of the stock exchange.

Heavy Currency Retirements.

Heavy retirements of emergency currency and clearing house certificates marked the gathering of bank reserves, and this was followed by an interest reduction in long time loans to 5½ per cent. The bank statement showed a further increase of reserves and a moderate cash gain in place of an expected loss.

Wall street drew its own inference, mainly favorable, from the elections. Turkey's entrance into the war, the closing of the North sea, and developments in the Mexican snarl were counted among the week's adverse features.

Closing: Mercantile paper, 6. Sterling exchange firm; 60 day bills 4.8750; for cables, 4.9150; for demand, 4.91. Bar silver 49⅝c. Exchanges, $211,231,436; balances, $9,316,948. Exchanges for the week, $1,308,793,084; balances for the week, $82,256,240.

To the Holders of the 4% Collateral Trust Bonds:

Answering the latest circular issued by the Wallace committee, I quote section 13 of the trust agreement, securing your bonds, which provides:

"Anything in this Trust agreement contained to the contrary notwithstanding, the holders of 60% in amount of the bonds hereby secured and then outstanding shall have the right to direct the method and place of conducting and all proceedings for any sale of the trust estate or for the foreclosure of the trust agreement or any other action or proceeding hereunder."

The only purpose of this provision was to do what we demand—direct the trustee to buy the railway stock which underlies our bonds, of the sale for the benefit of all bondholders.

The judge of the United States District Court in this case said:

"Of course the ideal result to be obtained would be the acquisition by the bondholders of their proportionate share of the pledged stock, subject, necessarily, to such proper expenses as proceedings of this kind entail."

We have offered again to join in directing the Trustee to buy the pledged stock for all bondholders—the only possible method of securing the result characterized by the court as ideal. Why is this not done? why must we be saddled with all sorts of unknown charges and expenses and impossible conditions if, indeed, there be no ulterior purposes? Why should we be required to pay enormous charges of an unnecessary committee, to allow our stock to be pledged and indefinitely withheld from us, and voted upon by any committee or anybody else, when by their simple direction to the Trustee we can secure the prompt return to each holder of his proper share of the pledged stock—take the management out of the hands of the Reid-Moore interests and begin our suits to secure restitution of the vast sums diverted from the Company?

The committee and its counsel now say that the Trustee cannot buy the stock for all bondholders even though 60% request it to do so. I am advised by the best of legal authority that there is no doubt that the Trustee CAN do so. Read section 13 and judge for yourselves or ask any reputable lawyer.

You must decide for yourselves what can be the possible purpose of the Wallace Committee in refusing to comply with this plain demand and availing itself of this simple, just, and inexpensive method.

Meantime do not deposit your bonds, and if you have deposited, withdraw them. Do not be worried about the pressure sought to be put upon us through advertising the stock for sale—they cannot "freeze us out" no matter what they do or say.

We must insist upon our rights, and if we do, I have no doubt that we shall succeed in getting the Trustee to buy the stock for all of us, without being required to put up more money, hypothecate our stock, or to pay the enormous charges and expenses of the Wallace Committee, the unknown Dutch Committee, or any other Committee whatsoever.

The Trustee still refuses to give us a list of the bondholders and this is our only means of reaching you.

THE victory of the little ballot at the recent election, insuring the boulevard link project and the forest preserve, is the rounding out of a program of municipal work and development for Chicago which is certain to stimulate greatly the material interests of the city, in addition to the far reaching and incalculable benefits which are to come from a realization of some of the most important features of the Chicago plan.

These Improvements Scheduled.

Among these big undertakings upon which a start probably will be made during 1915 are:

The new West Side railroad passenger and freight terminal to cost from $25,000,000 to $40,000,000.

Street car subways, for which $19,000,000 is available.

The widening of West Twelfth street.

Lake front development carried on by the park boards.

Completion of the new municipal pier and pavilion.

Bathing beach and water works development on which the city has started.

The boulevard link and the other projects just approved of at the recent election.

The carrying out of these vast projects, which are of an epoch making character as concerns the future of Chicago, means the employment of thousands of men for several years to come, and should prove a potent factor in stimulating all lines of business.

Means Real Estate Boom.

Real estate particularly should come in for vast benefits from these undertakings, because of the revolutionary changes for the better which they are certain to work in wide areas of contiguous territory. To a certain extent these benefits will be localized, so far as maximum results are concerned, but the comprehensive and far reaching character of the undertakings, so far as they concern the future welfare of the city, are certain to help real estate in all parts of the city. In view of the healthy value conditions which prevail generally throughout the city many real estate men are of the opinion the market is likely to experience a period of great and prolonged activity, accompanied by great building and development projects.

It promises to go hand in hand with the great general business revival this country is expected to have next year, born of the necessities of other nations, because of the European war.

View of Leading Dealer.

Frederick S. Oliver of Oliver & Co., who has been particularly active in furthering the work of the Chicago plan commission, has this to say regarding the situation:

"The approval by the voters of Chicago at the recent election of the bond issue for $3,800,000, to cover the City of Chicago's part of the cost of the Michigan boulevard link connection to the north side, is especially gratifying to the many public spirited citizens who have given so much of their time and efforts towards the accomplishment of the main features of the plan commission's plan of Chicago.

"The Michigan boulevard link, the widening of Twelfth street, and the proposed connecting parkway between Grant and Jackson parks, have been discussed in public so long that many citizens have despaired of the making of these great improvements, but now the accomplishment of two of them—the "link" and the widening of Twelfth street—seems to be near at hand.

Distributing Expense Settled.

"The long delay in the case of the latter was caused in the greatest part by the difficulty involved in apportioning among the railroads their share of the cost of the Twelfth street viaduct, east of the river. Happily this has been arranged, and all that stands in the way is a single step to be taken by the city council.

"The report of the commissioners appointed to make the necessary assessments, and the assessment roll, we are assured, will be filed before the end of this month. In the case of the "Link," the commissioners' report and the assessment roll are promised to be filed within the next sixty days.

"By the vote of the citizens at the recent election such a general seal of approval was put on the "Link" as to warrant little or no objection on the part of property owners whose property is sought to be taken in part by the improvement.

Work to Begin Soon.

"In both the above cases actual work should begin in the near future and the prospect of an almost certain commencement of the same warrants the belief that great activity will ensue in property in the zones immediately affected by these two great improvements.

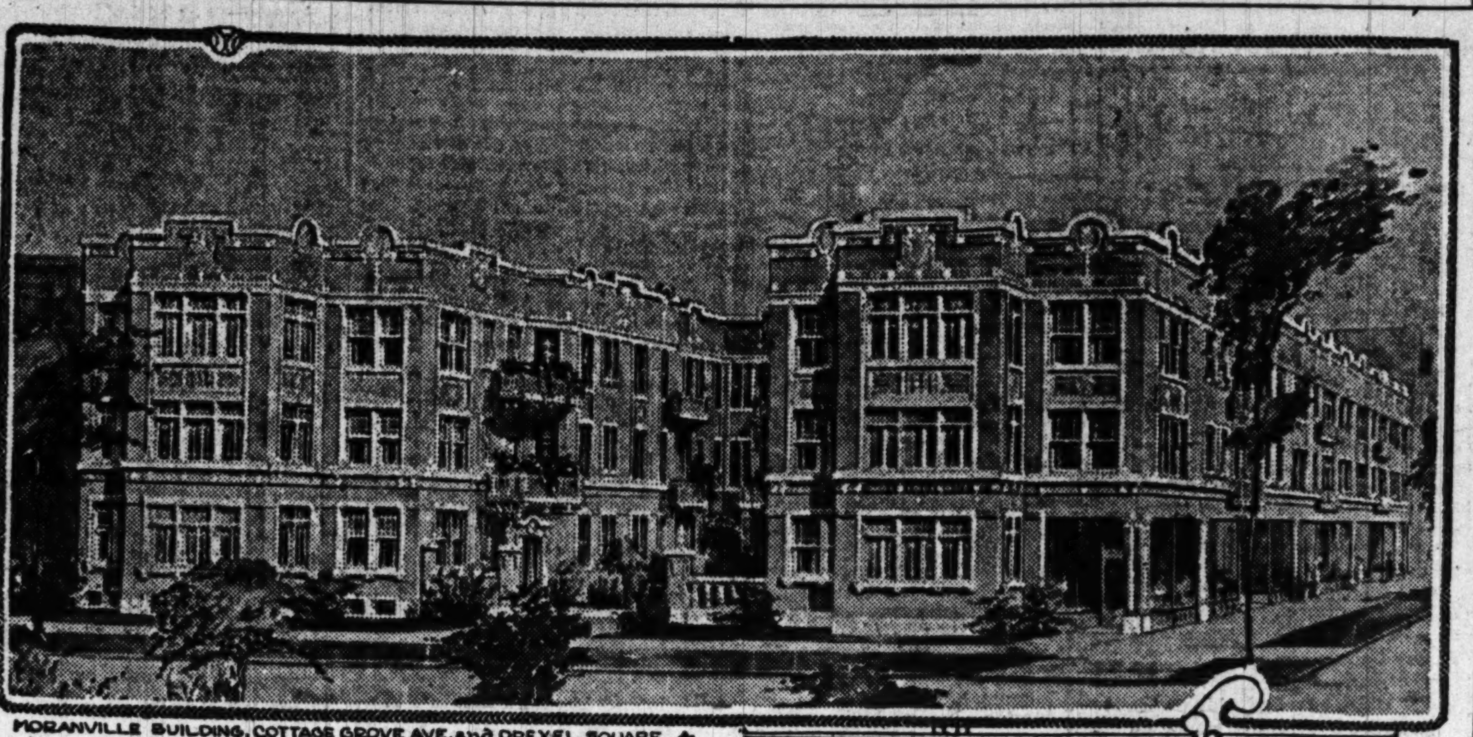
"The accomplishment of these improvements, to be followed by the widening and leveling of Canal street, as well as the installation of a viaduct and bridge in North Canal street to the north side, will mean more in future value to real estate in general than the most optimistic could hope for.

Material Men Will Profit.

"Actual work so soon to begin on two of the aforesaid improvements will furnish employment to many now out of work, as well as remuneration to material men, and will, in a measure at least, compensate for the slackness in the building trades.

"In the general gloom resulting from the European war the fact that Chicago is ready to vote money for the bonds and to tax her citizens for great public improvements stands out as a shining illustration of Chicago's confidence in herself and in the stability of her real estate investments."

Attractive Homes Provided in This Fireproof Building.



MORANVILLE BUILDING, COTTAGE GROVE AVE. and DREXEL SQUARE.

The Moranville building, which is now being erected by Joseph E. Keidel and Michael D. Moran at the southeast corner of Drexel square and Cottage Grove avenue, opposite Washington park, is an interesting example of complete fireproof construction applied to a store and flat building of the type designed to accommodate small families. The building is three stories in height, containing eight stores on the Cottage Grove avenue side and thirty-nine apartments fronting on Drexel square, the apartments being provided with kitchenettes, disappearing in-a-dor beds, and private porches or balconies, the front apartments having sun parlors. The materials used are steel and reinforced concrete, the only woodwork being the covering of the concrete floors, the doors, window frames, and trimmings. The land fronts 100 feet on Drexel square and 144 feet on Cottage Grove avenue. The building is to cost $155,000 to construct, and the land is valued at $30,000. The gross rental is estimated at $22,860 a year. In connection with the construction of this building S. W. Straus & Co. have made a loan to the owners of $100,000 in the form of a 6 per cent serial first mortgage bond issue maturing in two to seven years. The flats are intended to rent at $30 to $45 a month.

CARRY OUT MORGAN'S IDEAS.

Architects of New $3,000,000 Counting House of J. P. M. & Co. Exemplify Financier's Plans.

J. Pierpont Morgan had certain ideas as to architecture and they are embodied in the new $3,000,000 counting house of J. P. Morgan & Co. at Wall and Broad streets in New York City, opened on Thursday, says the Construction News.

This building is on a site which was once the residence of Alexander Hamilton, founder of the currency system of this country. The land is now valued at $4,100,000. It fronts 132 feet in Wall street and 90 feet in Broad street.

The banking quarters represent the views of the late J. P. Morgan on what a modern banking house should be, the exterior design and interior details having been worked out with much thought during the last years of Mr. Morgan's life.

LE MOYNE LOAN FEATURE OF THE REALTY MARKET

The feature of several unusually interesting loans and leases closed during the week was the loan of $400,000 made by the Northern Trust company, trustee, on the Le Moyne property at the southwest corner of Wabash avenue and Lake street in connection with the construction of a modern eight story store and office building to be erected at that point.

The transaction has a special interest for the reason it is the largest loan made in the downtown district since the beginning of the European war, and also because it served to give a line on interest rates on this class of loans, of which practically none has been made with a resulting doubt as to what actual interest rates prevailed.

This loan bears 5 per cent interest, which, it is safe to say, is the minimum rate in the market. In fact, it is known that some lenders have demanded a 5½ per cent rate for loans in this district, although for smaller amounts.

Interest Rates Firm.

In this connection it may be said that while there is a decidedly better feeling in the loan market than a few weeks ago, large loans are still exceedingly difficult to secure and interest rates are firm with 6 per cent being practically the minimum rate for all outside loans.

The loan above referred to is secured by the plot having a frontage of 165 feet on Wabash avenue and 114 feet in Lake street. In connection with the loan, which ran to William B. McIlvaine, as trustee, there was filed for record a trust agreement in which Mr. McIlvaine is trustee in the disposition of the property to the children of Mr. Le Moyne. The beneficiaries are Francis J., William M. Le Moyne, Madeline Le Moyne Ellicot, Mary Le Moyne Forest, Julia Le Moyne McIlvaine, Katherine Le Moyne Fisher, and Romaine Le Moyne McLannahan.

The agreement further states that $100,000 has been given by Mr. Le Moyne to be used in connection with the construction of the building, the cost of which is placed at $500,000.

Big Lease Closed.

A big lease of building space in the North Michigan avenue district closed during the week involved the four story and basement building at 172, on the west side of the street, between Randolph and Lake streets, which has been leased by Louise C. Walker to the National Cash Register company for a term of twenty years at a term rent of $180,000, which is at the rate of $9,000 a year.

The owner will remodel the building, which, when completed, will be occupied by the lessee company for its Chicago salesrooms and offices. The lease was negotiated by Albert H. Wetten & Co. and Seymour Morris.

A large hotel lease in the outlying south side also was closed, comprising the Calumet hotel, now in process of construction on the east side of Cottage Grove avenue, just south of Sixty-third street. The building is a five story and basement structure, occupying a lot 125x108 feet and will contain five stores on the ground floor and 140 guest rooms on the upper floors, nearly all with baths.

Will Cost $225,000.

There will be a restaurant, banquet hall, etc., and the cost of the building is placed at about $225,000. It has been leased by Thomas Gaynor and Frank Nasher to Louis Quitman for a term of twenty-five years at a reported annual rent of $19,000, or $475,000 for the term.

Another noteworthy lease was made in the new north side manufacturing and warehouse district just north of the river, of special interest for the reason it involves the addition of another important improvement in that district. Alexander Bauer purchased from Philip Pardon and Ernest Bieger 50x109 feet, south front, in Whiting street, 110 feet east of Wells street, a nominal consideration being given.

It will be improved as soon as some old dwellings on the premises are razed with a seven story and basement heavy mill construction building, occupying practically the entire lot.

All Space Leased.

Adjoining this on the east is a six story building erected by John J. Gallery in 1910, and the two buildings, containing 73,600 square feet of floor space, have been leased to the Elgin Electric Ventilating company for twenty years at a term rental of $240,000, which is at the rate of $12,000 a year. Hodge & Chandler represented all the parties to the transaction, while the plans for the building have been prepared by Architect Charles A. Weary.

The second and third floors of the building at the southwest corner of Cottage Grove avenue and Forty-seventh street, now in course of construction, have been leased by George L. Herman to Elmer Hopkins for a term of ten years and two months at a term rental of $46,766, or $4,600 per annum. Mark Levy & Bro. were the brokers.

The same brokers have sold the leasehold interest of Max Goldstine in the St. Regis hotel, at the southwest corner of North Clark street and Grand avenue, to Cornelia De Koven Douglas, George W. Douglas, and the United States Trust company of New York, trustee of the estate of Hugh T. Dickey, the consideration being withheld. It is stated that part of the consideration to Goldstine was ninety lots at Grand, Central Park, Division street, and Homan avenue. W. G. Carlisle represented the Dickey estate.

Lunchroom Lease.

Samuel A. Cohn and James M. Lovellette, owners of the Hotel Astor, have leased the ground floor and basement of 184-186 North Clark street to James Roder and Peter Pastras for ten years from May 1, 1915, at $2,700 for the first year, $5,400 a year for the next four years, and $6,000 per year for the next five years. The lessees will remodel the premises for a restaurant business to be known as "The Astor Lunch."

White & Tabor leased this property for Hobart W. Williams to Cohn and Lovellette, the present lessors, for ninety-nine years.

Greenebaum Sons' Bank and Trust company is trustee in a loan of $75,000 to secure a 6 per cent bond issue secured by the property at the northwest corner of Fifty-first street and Champlain avenue, 181x145 feet, facing Washington park.

North Side Loan.

The Chicago Title and Trust company is trustee in a loan of $50,000 five years at 6 per cent to James T. Jarrell, secured by the property in Edgecomb place, 195 feet east of Sheridan road, 100x129 feet, with new apartment house improvements.

The Central Trust company of Illinois is trustee in a loan of $45,000, five years, at 6 per cent, to Smith C. Van Alen, secured by the property at the northwest corner of University avenue and Fifty-fifth street, 112½x164 feet, east front, with store and flat improvements.

$160,000 Bond Issue.

Greenebaum Sons Bank and Trust company are trustees in three bond issue loans aggregating $160,000, all bearing 6 per cent interest. One is for $85,000 to David Angus and John Cameron and is secured by 150x176½ feet on Pratt boulevard, between Sheridan road and Lake Michigan, being improved with a thirty-six apartment building.

Charles A. Kusel is the borrower in another loan of $50,000 secured by the new two and three story store, office, theater, and apartment building at the northwest corner of Forty-third street and Ellis avenue, and the leasehold interest in the 198x150 feet of ground occupied by it.

Another for $25,000 is to George L. Berman on the three story building now in course of construction at the southwest corner of Cottage Grove avenue and Forty-seventh street.

ASK CAR LINE EXTENSION.

Southwest Property Owners' Association Waits on Chicago and West Town Road Officials.

At the meeting of the Southwest Property Owners' association on Friday a committee reported it had interviewed the officials of the Chicago and West Town Railway association, which controls the street railways in the villages of Cicero and Berwyn, with a view to securing an extension of the road on Fifty-second avenue, from Thirty-third to Thirty-ninth street, and along Thirty-ninth street west to the village of Lyons. The officials promised to carefully investigate the situation and seemed impressed with the facts submitted to them by the members of the committee. There is no transportation now in that territory south of Twenty-sixth street and west of Fifty-second avenue, and the members of the association believe that under the impulse of even fair transportation facilities there would be a rapid development on that district.

The association also has secured the indorsement of both real estate boards of its plan for bridges over the sanitary canal in the district, and the recommendation of a committee of the Association of Commerce. The membership of the association is increasing, and much interest is being shown in its plans for improving the district, which is thought to have great possibilities in a manufacturing way.

MERGING THE TWO BOARDS.

Question of Consolidation Up Again —Special Meeting to Consider Same Set for Nov. 18.

The question of the consolidation of the two real estate boards came up at the monthly meeting of the Chicago Real estate board last week and after some discussion action on the matter was deferred to a special meeting of the board to be held Wednesday, Nov. 18 at 2 o'clock. The matter was brought up by Charles D. Richards, who moved the appointment of a committee to confer with a like committee of the Cook county board regarding the matter. In view of the importance of the matter and the rather small attendance at the meeting it was deemed better to postpone action to a later meeting to be devoted exclusively to a consideration of this subject. This is the second attempt to bring about a merger of the two bodies, a similar movement having come to naught about two years ago. Those who are behind the proposed merger are of the opinion it would be better for both organizations, as well as the interests they seek to serve to come together. Both organizations are in a prosperous condition and their amalgamation would result in an organization which would lead by a large margin any other real estate body in this country.

The following committee was announced to prepare a ticket to be voted for at the approaching annual election of the board: Perkins B. Bass, Edward M. Willoughby, Emil A. Schintz, John E Colnon, John F. Wallace, Albert H. Wetten, and Frederick S. Oliver.

SMALL TRADES FORM BULK OF REALTY DEALS

TIME FOR DULL MARKET.

While the volume of the week's business was large, approximating that of the corresponding week a year ago, when the nations of the world were at peace with one another, it was essentially a market for medium priced and cheap properties, there being no transactions of any particular magnitude closed or filed for record during the week. In this respect it offered a marked contrast to that of the previous week, in which there was an unusually large number of big deals, involving both outside business as well as flat properties, with a fair sprinkling of residence sales.

It is likely the excitement attendant upon the election had something to do with this apparent dullness, but, in any event, it is not thought to have any significance in a market way, and merely to have represented one of those vagaries of the market wherein its activities were confined to negotiations instead of closed transactions, as was the case during the previous week. Again, the market always slows up somewhat at this season of the year.

Small Deals Numerous.

As indicated above, there was much doing in cheap and medium priced properties, although subdividers as a whole reported a rather quiet week. That there is considerable buying for purposes of improvement is shown by the large number of permits issued by the city building department during the week, fifty being issued on Thursday alone. They mostly were for comparatively low priced structures, although several good sized permits were taken out, and announcements were made of several other large projects about to be undertaken. In this connection several large building loans were closed, indicating an easing tendency in this field.

While of a minor character so far as the magnitude of the transaction is concerned, one deal, comprising the sale of the property at the southwest corner of Milwaukee avenue and North Central avenue, formerly Fifty-sixth avenue, was of unusual interest because of the phenomenal advance in values at that point made during the last two years as the result of street car extension.

Enormous Increase in Value.

The property, which has a frontage of 75 feet on Milwaukee, with a depth of 117 feet, was sold by Mrs. Mary E. Smith to L. F. Pasdeloup for a reported consideration of $15,000, which is at the rate of $200 a front foot. This becomes interesting in view of the statement that it is a part of 508 feet of frontage which Mrs. Smith purchased less than two years ago for $14 a front foot. This surely is going some. Harvey Hill & Co. were the brokers.

A noteworthy north side deal involving store, office, and theater improvements to cost in the neighborhood of $100,000 was the sale by Hugo Sonnseschein and Charles H. Kusel to Nathan Ascher and James F. Greenebaum of the property at 4730 Sheridan road, 100x150 feet. The property is opposite Lakeside place, where it ends at Sheridan road, and the sale is said to have been on the basis of about $400 a front foot.

Will Erect Office Building.

It is one and a half blocks north of Wilson avenue. The purchasers have contracted with Kusel and Harris for the erection of a two story building to cover the lot, to contain four stores, offices on the second floor, and a high grade moving picture theater. Ascher Bros. will have charge of the theater. Gus M. Greenebaum was the broker.

The fifteen apartment building at the northwest corner of Lexington street and Spaulding avenue, with 50x123 feet of ground, has been sold by Jacob M. Schwartz to Abraham Lorch, the consideration being $10, subject to an incumbrance of $30,400, but the actual price is said to have been in the neighborhood of $50,000.

The seller took in part payment the store and flat building at 3531 West Madison street, and the store building at the southwest corner of Albany avenue and Polk street, and the premises 917 Kedzie avenue, the properties being subject to an incumbrance of $13,000. John F. Diffenderfer was the broker.

Good Deal in Lake View.

A noteworthy deal in Lake View business property was the sale by Pruitt & Moore, builders, to Sarah Isidor of the property on Argyle street, 139 feet east of Broadway, south front, and adjoining the Argyle L station of the Northwestern elevated road.

The lot is 46x99 feet and is improved with a two story white tile front building with stores on the ground floor and offices above. A nominal consideration is given in the transfer, which is made subject to an incumbrance of $15,000, but a reported consideration of $50,000 is given by the brokers. George J. Kappes represented both parties.

WILL HOLD TORRENS DINNER

A "Torrens dinner" will be given at the Hotel Hayes, Sixty-fourth street and University avenue, Thursday next at 6:45 p. m under the auspices of the Torrens committee of the Cook county real estate board. The speakers will be John A. Carroll, president of the Hyde Park State bank, Richard N. Wolfe, president of the Cook county board, Albert H. Tyrrell, chief examiner of titles at the Torrens office.

A number of real estate men, it is announced, will give their experiences from the practical side.

R. I. OWNERS TRY TO MEET AGAIN

MAY ADJOURN NOW, TOO

Stockholders of the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Railway company will gather in Chicago tomorrow for a second attempt at an annual meeting. J. N. Wallace, president of the Central Trust company of New York, trustee for 95.14 per cent of the railway stock, voted an adjournment until Nov. 9 immediately after the calling of the first meeting on Oct. 8. Just what will happen at tomorrow's meeting is a question. There might be another adjournment, or the stockholders might proceed with business and elect or reëlect directors for the coming year.

The terms of four of the present directors, two of whom have been prominent in financing the Rock Island during the last ten years, expire this year. They are Daniel G. Reid of New York, Edward S. Moore of Chicago, Roberts Walker of New York, and John J. Mitchell of Chicago.

Trouble Began May 1.

The trouble began on May 1, when the holding company defaulted on the interest of $71,353,500 bonds, for which the stock of the operating company stood as collateral security. The Rock Island company and the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Railroad company were organized in 1902, by the Reid-Moore crowd to take over the stock of the operating company. The Rock Island company issued stock and the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Railroad company issued bonds in exchange for the $71,353,500, or 95.14 per cent of the railway stock.

Each holder of $100 share of railway stock got $100 in the railroad company's 4 per cent collateral trust bonds and $70 preferred stock and $100 common stock of the Rock Island company. Then the $71,353,500 stock was deposited as collateral behind the bonds, under a mortgage agreement of 4 per cent interest annually.

Provides for Sale.

In case of default, the mortgage provided for a sale of the stock pledged, in block. There was also the further stipulation that 60 per sent or more of the bondholders could ask for a pro rata distribution of the stock rather than a block sale.

The bondholders protective committee of which Mr. Wallace is chairman, is now trying to get the bondholders to deposit, with the committee, looking to some such distribution of the stock, rather than to throw the stock on the market at this time. At the time of the original date of the annual meeting only $20,000,000 worth of the bonds had been deposited. Since that time the deposits have been increased to $41,000,000—a majority of the bonds, but not sufficient under the mortgage stipulation, which requires 60 per cent to avoid the block sale.

Mr. Wallace as the holder and trustee of almost 96 per cent of the stock, will determine the results of tomorrow's meeting.

WILL REBUILD STOCKYARDS.

Kansas City, Mo., Nov. 7.—Plans for rebuilding the stockyards destroyed by fire last night were begun today by George R. Collett, general manager. The burned area is about fifteen acres in extent. The latest estimates of the loss place the figure at something over $100,000.

WILSON IN QUIZ ON COTTON LOAN

Prevails on Gregory to Explain Why Pool Isn't Barred by Law.

LATTER DEFENDS PLAN.

Washington, D. C., Nov. 7.—[Special.]—President Wilson today took a hand in the cotton loan pool controversy between the New England bankers and Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo.

The president called Attorney General Gregory to the White House and asked him for his reasons in support of his contention that the proposed cotton pool does not violate any of the anti-trust laws. At the president's request, the attorney general prepared an opinion and submitted it in writing.

Attorney General Gregory says that the cotton pool plan is not in contravention of the Sherman or other anti-trust laws.

No Price Fixing Nor Restraint.

"To meet the situation," he says in his opinion, "the plan in question has been proposed. It contemplates the making up by a syndicate, composed principally of banks and bankers, of a fund of $135,000,000, to be lent on the security of cotton to borrowers in the cotton growing states, under the direction of a central committee, composed of the individual members of the federal reserve board, and various auxiliary committees.

"Nothing in the nature of price fixing, restriction of production, divison of territory, or control of markets is involved. Loans will be made as freely to buyers of cotton as to producers. The members of the syndicate will be perfectly free to make other loans, in any amount, to any persons, and on any lawful terms. Borrowers will be under no restraint whatever as to the price or the time at which they may sell their cotton.

Simply Provides Needed Cash.

"In short, the plan simply provides the cash which is imperatively required to liquidate the indebtedness incurred in the course of raising and marketing the cotton crop, but which cannot now be obtained from the usual sources of supply because of the extraordinary conditions prevailing in the money markets and in the trade of the world.

"The amount of this fund is barely more than 1 per cent of the total outstanding loans and discounts of banking institutions in the United States and is much less than the amount of cash usually employed in marketing the cotton crop. Nor would even this small part of the banking capital of the United States become impounded as a result of the plan, but, upon being lent would return at once into general circulation.

"I am unable to see how such a plan could be thought to fall within the purview of the anti-trust laws."

HONEST LAWYER FINDS $3,000

E. D. Chapin Loses Purse in City Hall and Eugene Quirk Returns It to Him.

E. D. Chapin, a motion picture manufacturer living at the Hotel Readsborough, Wilson and Racine avenues, is anxious to testify to the honesty of one Chicago lawyer. For twenty minutes yesterday Mr. Chapin was "out" $3,000 which he carried in a bill folder. He lost the wallet in the city hall and did not miss it until he had left the building.

Attorney Eugene Quirk found the pocketbook. He counted the roll. Then he studied.

"The owner probably will return here in the course of his search, so I'll just wait and see what happens," he decided.

Chapin returned within a half hour and was handed his money.

POLICE SEEK AD SWINDLER.

The police are looking for a well dressed man, about 30 years old, who swindled Lambesos Bros., confectioners, at 2701 East Seventy-fifth street, out of $37.10. The man entered the store Friday and persuaded Louis Lambesos to sign a bogus contract for advertising in a magazine. In addition to the advertising Lambesos was to get 500 free tickets for theaters in the neighborhood.

SPLIT INTEREST REPORT SHELVED

Eight Aldermen Object to Charge Concerning Bank Stock Ownership.

MERRIAM 'STANDS PAT.'

Members of the council finance committee who were named by the "split interest" subcommittee as owning bank stock yesterday prevented the adoption of the subcommittee's report. They denounced it as "unfair and incorrect."

After three hours' wrangling the finance committee decided, by a vote of 8 to 1, to send the report back to the subcommittee for "corrections."

Ald Charles E. Merriam, who directed the "split interest" investigation, registered the single negative vote. He announced he would hold no more hearings, but would present a minority report to the council. This report, he added, would be the subcommittee report that was rejected by the finance committee.

Bank Stock Contention Bone.

The majority of committee members objected to the statement that seventeen aldermen owned bank stock during the period from 1911 to 1914. Ald. Lewis D. Sitts said he sold his two shares prior to 1911. Ald. James A. Kearns asserted the bank in which he was interested received no city deposits.

"The subcommittee didn't have the manly courage to state the number of shares held and when it was held," exclaimed Ald. Sitts. "Common courtesy and common decency would have dictated a more thorough investigation on this matter. It's unfair."

"You Never Were Fair."

"The records in the recorder's office show you disposed of your stock Dec. 15, 1911," said Donald Richberg, attorney for the subcommittee.

"That's untrue; I sold it in 1910," retorted Ald. Sitts. "You don't want to be fair and never were fair."

"Am I to be subjected to a personal attack?" asked Mr. Richberg.

"I was a candidate for office," continued Mr. Sitts, "and your statement cost me thousands of votes."

"I am a member of the subcommittee," aid Ald. Kearns, "but I refuse to be a party to the report. It doesn't state the facts. Why not strike out all reference to the aldermen?"

"I have no kick coming," remarked Ald. Theodore K. Long. "My only regret is that I don't hold more bank stock."

"The Lust for Notoriety."

Ald. Eugene Block, apparently referring to Ald. Merriam and Mr. Richberg, said:

"These gentlemen were looking for notoriety—that's all. They had only one motive, the lust for notoriety."

"This is a tempest in a teapot," declared Ald. Merriam. "The whole question whether there were fifteen, sixteen, or seventeen aldermen is immaterial."

Agree on Ordinances.

The aldermen agreed the legislative measures advocated by the subcommittee should be adopted. However, only one was passed. This is an ordinance directing the city controller, in advertising for bids for the deposit of city funds, to ask proposals on the basis of thirty, sixty, and ninety day deposits.

HARVARD RUSH BEATS TIGERS BY 20-0 COUNT

Mahan Boots Two Goals and Crimson Scores Two Touchdowns.

PRINCETON IS WEAK.

Cambridge, Mass., Nov. 7.—[Special.]—Harvard administered an unexpectedly severe licking to Princeton in the stadium today, defeating the Tiger football team, 20 to 0. Harvard found Princeton's attack easy to cope with, for all the Tigers offered on offense was a wide open formation for its forward pass, which the Crimson defense smeared repeatedly.

On the line Princeton offered weak resistance, and the Harvard backs went plunging through for long gains. Twice the Tigers stiffened their opposition, but on these occasions Mahan was called upon to make drop kicks. He booted two field goals, one from the thirty-eight yard line in the first period, and another easier one in the second period from the fifteen yard mark.

Tiger Punters Star.

The only department of the game in which Princeton made a good showing was in punting. Driggs and Law, who did the kicking for the Tigers, sent away some of the longest spirals ever seen in the stadium. Sometimes the drives were so long the Harvard backs returned with the ball for good gains because Princeton's ends could not cover the kicks

Harvard played a waiting game and saved its resources until Princeton erred. Twice Harvard gained the ball in Tiger territory and then let loose the deceptive plays that had been held under cover for today's game. Once within striking distance of the Princeton goal, Bradlee and Francke resorted to old fashioned football and plunged straight through the line. Bradlee made the first touchdown in the second period and Hardwick, who played right end during the first half, was sent in at half back in the second half and scored Harvard's second touchdown

Mahan's Kicking a Factor.

Mahan's punting saved Harvard from losing ground, for the Harvard half back was a worthy rival of Briggs and Law in getting off long kicks. Thus the only branch of the game in which Princeton overshadowed Harvard proved of no benefit to the Tigers.

Harvard's open game, which gained consistently, was made up of lateral and delayed passes. The Princeton line was fooled many times by the tricky attack of Haughton's men and this fact, added to the Tigers' fumbles at inopportune times, was responsible for the overwhelming defeat of Princeton.

More than 35,000 people saw the battle, including 500 undergraduates and 2,00 Princeton alumni.

Details of Play.

In the first half the rivals engaged in a punting duel with the Crimson team having a shade of advantage on account of Eddie Mahan's accurate toe work. In every instance Hardwick and Coolidge, the Harvard ends, had Mahan's crafty kicks covered and the Tiger backs had great difficulty in returning them.

Harvard punted almost immediately after having received Driggs' kick and the duel of the kickers was on. Harvard was quickly on the offensive when Logan, the Crimson quarter back, muffed one of Driggs' punts and an alert Tiger end fell on it. On the next play, however, Harvard got out of a bad hole.

High Pass Stops Tigers.

With the ball within thirty-five yards of the enemy's goal line Gennert, the Princeton center, made a high pass to Driggs, which went over the head of the Tiger full back and was recovered by Harvard. The Crimson then pressed on toward the goal of the Orange and Black, but when the Princeton line began to stiffen Mahan tried his first drop kick, which fell short of a field goal by a few yards.

Princeton punted out of immediate danger, but Harvard, using Mahan, Bradlee, and Francke with regularity, pushed aside the opposing line and brought the ball to the thirty-eight yard line, from where Mahan kicked a field goal. Score: Harvard, 3; Princeton, 0.

Princeton again found itself defending its goal line, and this time Harvard penetrated to the fifteen yard mark before the Tiger line braced. Mahan had an easy time making his second field goal on an easy drop kick from the fifteen yard line

Bradlee Goes Across.

In the latter part of the second period Harvard unloosed its deceptive attack Criss-cross plunges, lateral passes, and delayed passes, which Coach Haughton's men had been keeping under cover, brought the ball within striking distance of the Princeton goal. Bradlee, beneath whose assaults the Tiger line was crumbling, was called on to take the ball in successive rushes, and he pushed through the Tiger line for the first touchdown. The first half came to an end with Harvard in the lead, 13 to 0.

In the second half Princeton was unable to stem the tide. Mahan still held his own against Driggs, and the best asset of the Tigers had his work offset. Harvard uncorked some old fashioned football, and near the end of the third period brought the ball into Princeton territory. At this point Bradlee was sent against the Orange and Black line repeatedly and it crumbled beneath the attacks of Haughton's forwards. As the third period came

BUCKEYE PASSES BEAT HOOSIERS

Indianapolis, Ind., Nov. 7.—[Special.]—Inability to solve the forward passes of Ohio State in the second half resulted in the defeat of Indiana today, 13 to 3. It was the first time in the history of athletic relations between the two schools that Indiana was ever defeated by the Ohicans

After playing nothing but straight football in the first half, Ohio State opened the third quarter with the open game. In four minutes after the start of the period a pass, Pickerell to Cherry, netted forty yards. Another pass, Pickerell to Hobt, put the ball on the Hoosier three yard line, and Capt. Graf took it over.

Gains on Forward Passes.

After the next kickoff a series of passes from Graf to Pickerell and from Pickerell to Gheens nearly all resulted in gains. Indiana's only score was in the first half, when Archie Erehart kicked a field goal

Both teams followed the ball well and tackled hard. On straight football the Hoosiers' defense proved stronger than Ohio, but Coach Wilce's men excelled in the open game. Capt. Erehart of Indiana outpunted Capt. Graf of Ohio. During the game Indiana attempted only one forward pass, which was incomplete. Ohio used the pass fourteen times and gained on half that number.

Between halves the bands of both schools paraded the field. Gov. Ralston of Indiana and Gov. Cox of Ohio occupied boxes.

Erehart Makes Drop Kick.

In the first half not a single forward pass or other open play was attempted much to the disappointment of the bleachers. The entire half was taken up in old fashioned line bucks and mass formations and neither side was able to score until near the close of the second period, when Archie Erehart negotiated a beautiful drop kick for the Hoosiers from the sixteen yard line. The half ended: Indiana, 3; Ohio State, 0. Lineup:

MICHIGAN AGGIES WIN FROM MT. UNION, 21 TO 14.

Lansing, Mich., Nov. 7.—[Special.]—The Michigan Aggies defeated Mount Union, 21 to 14, this afternoon, although the Ohio team outplayed the local eleven during three quarters of the game. Lovell was the big ground gainer for Mount Union and repeatedly marched through M. A. C.'s line for long gains. Mount Union worked the forward pass repeatedly with much success. The visitors excelled the Aggies at basketball tactics. Capt. Julian did the stellar role for the M. A. C. Miller, the star right end of the M. A. C. eleven, was rendered unconscious in the second quarter and was carried from the field. Concussion of the brain is feared. Lineup:

NAPERVILLE SCARES WABASH

Crawfordsville, Ind., Nov. 7.—[Special.]—Northwestern college of Naperville threw a scare into the Little Giants of Wabash college this afternoon in their clash at Ingalls field, holding Wabash to a 17 to 7 score. Wabash made two touchdowns and a drop kick in the first half but the Germans outplayed the Scarlet in the second half. Obenhelman, star full back for Northwestern, plowed through for his team's marker in the third period.

IOWA CRUSHES PURPLE TEAM; WINS BY 27-0

Evanston Men Gain Well, but Lack Strength to Push Over Score.

GROSS STAR OF FRAY.

BY PURPLE.

Iowa gave Northwestern another shove into the cellar sarcophagus yesterday, defeating Coach Murphy's men, 27 to 0. Sometimes the contest resembled a football game, but at other times the Purple was easy for the Hawkeyes. The Purple gained ground through the line, around the ends, and by forward passes, but consistently lacked the counting punch. The visitors had the punch—a Sammy Gross punch—which punctured the Purple line for gain after gain.

Poor tackling by McDevitt's linemen was largely responsible for the Iowa parading. Often two or three Purple linemen would break through and tag a Hawkeye runner, but fail to down him. Northwestern's forward passes worked brilliantly for many gains, but the final pass for a touchdown always was intercepted or muffed.

Purple Recruits Show Well.

Murphy's new men, Gray and Bradley, demonstrated their class as runners and forward pass receivers, and with experience may become players of fame. Ellis, subbing at full back, also showed well Full Back Patterson got off some good punts, once kicking from behind his own goal line to the Iowa forty-five yard mark.

Capt. Hightower did not start the game but managed to get in for a quarter. His crippled condition precluded any of his usually brilliant work.

Iowa presented its strongest lineup of the season and had an abundance of "pep" and dash, Parsons, Donnelly, and Garretson taking rapid signal orders from Gross, carried out a fast and hard attack.

It was apparent that Northwestern had greatly improved over its early performances, but the team is still far from the class of its conference opponents. The linemen are too easily deceived, they lack the physical power to cope with their opponents, and often fall into a lackadaisical spirit of play with disastrous results.

First Half.

Iowa kicked off to Williams, who returned ten yards. Northwestern carried the ball into Hawkeye territory, but Iowa held. The visitors started a series of gains, but were stopped. The Purple could not gain and Patterson's kick was blocked. Iowa began a march to the goal line, Gross adding the last fifteen yards on a run around left end. The kick out was mussed up. Score end of first period: Iowa, 6; Northwestern, 0.

The second quarter showed the Purple to better advantage, although the Hawkeyes scored early. Murphy's men found the visitors' line for two first downs during the quarter, but could not gain consistently, because of a Mr. Barron at left tackle for Iowa, who spoiled their efforts. The Purple made a total gain of eighty yards on forward passes, but couldn't advance when inside the visitors' fifteen yard line. Iowa scored on a forward pass, Gross to Donnelly, from the twelve yard line. Brueckner kicked goal. Score: Iowa, 13; Northwestern, 0.

Second Half.

The Purple played with slightly more intelligence during the second half and had better success in solving the Iowa attack. If its tackling had been better Iowa would have had few substantial gains. Murphy's men relied upon forward passes, while Iowa found greater success in line attacks.

Iowa caught the Purple asleep two minutes before the final whistle and Gross ran unmolested from his own fifteen yard line to the Purple's twenty yard mark, where Williams caught him after a hot race. The ball had not been blown down and Gross, responding to a nudge from one of his teammates, eased out of the crowd and ran for a touchdown. Parsons made a beautiful run in the third quarter for sixty yards across the goal line, but as he turned under the goal posts Patterson heaved him back a yard before he could touch the ball down. Wills went over in two plays Brueckner kicked goal. Donnelly scored Iowa's final touchdown and the whistle blew with the ball on Northwestern's seven yard line in Iowa's possession. Lineup:

Lincoln, Neb., Nov. 7.—Morningside college scored on the Nebraska football team today when the local team fumbled in the last minute of play. Morningside recovered and a forward pass for twenty-three yards sent Vernon over for a touchdown. The final score was: Nebraska, 34; Morningside, 7. Nebraska toyed with the collegians throughout the game. Halligan's two long runs, one for sixty-five yards for touchdowns for Nebraska, were the features of the game.

RALLY BY YALE DEFEATS BROWN

Elis Get Clinching Score in the Last Quarter and Land Victory, 14 to 6.

New Haven, Conn., Nov. 7.—[Special.]—Brown proved a tough nut for Yale to crack in the windup of the Eli preliminary schedule today, but a rally in the final period won for Yale, 14 to 6.

Yale's attack foozled all through the first period, which closed without a score, although Yale jammed the ball down to the Brown twenty-yard line three times. Twice the Elis lost the ball on fumbles and on the third occasion relinquished it when Guernsey's drop kick trial bobbed over the crossbar on the first bound. Princeton won against Dartmouth on this freak play two years ago, but the rules have been changed since.

Fluke Score for Yale.

Yale forced the play throughout the first half, and Brown never was dangerous. Although Yale soiled the Brown slate with a score in the second period, the play was fluky in character and was protested by Coach Robinson of the visitors. "Red" Brann, Yale's left end, picked up a poor pass that had eluded both Gordon and Murphy and raced sixty yards for the touchdown. Robinson claimed the ball was dead and that Murphy had been downed before it was juggled, but Thompson overruled him.

The third period was scoreless, Guernsey missing a drop kick trial from the Brown twenty yard line on the fourth down after Yale had smashed fifty yards toward the Brown goal.

Brown Counts by Pass.

Starting the final quarter, Clark galloped around right end from midfield and crashed to the Yale ten yard line. Two line plunges for three yards each put the ball only four yards from the Eli goal, and Clark's forward pass to Murphy scored the touchdown. Gordon missed the goal.

Yale rallied splendidly in the last five minutes under the leadership of Capt. Talbott, who rushed back into the game. Twice the Elis marched the length of the field, scoring once and reaching the Brown ten yard line when the period ended. Lineup:

Bill to Steve.

CHICAGO Ill., Nov. 7.—Steve. I wisht Steve they payed the money for playing foot ball that they pay for playing baseball and I wouldent never half to do no worrying a bout where was my bread & butter comeing from because then I would be geting good money in the fall like I get in the summer & could lofe a round & not do nothing between xmas & time to start south on the traneing trip. I wisht you could see me play this here foot ball Steve & if you think Im a grate ball player I wisht you could see me play football & what would you think of me then. The cubs kept me on the bench all yr. because O'Day was sore on me & some of them old men was jellus but they aint no mgr. could keep me on the bench in foot ball jellus or no jellus because they would be mobed by the crowd because the crowd would insist on me playing after haveing saw me play. They was quite a crowd out to see the game last Sun. between the trogans & our team which is the spartans & before the game our mgr. thot sure we was going to have a hard game & he says he dident know, weather he should ought to let me play or not because I dident know nothing a bout the rules or none of there signs or nothing. But I guess he is tickeled to death now that he stuck me in there because I wisht you could of saw me play that game of foot ball & they isent nothing to the game but strength & I guess you know Steve thats where I shine. This here trogan club was little fellows & the man that played against me wasent no biger than rabbit Maranvil that plays with the bostons Braves & I made him look like a sucker. He was so wore out in a little wile that he was tooken out of the game, but the man they stuck in there after words was just as easy like the other 1 & they couldent niether 1 of them buge me. I could of did even better than I done only I was a scared of killing some body & the 1st. man that played against me looked so sick the 1st time I waloped him in the jaw that I was a scared they would half to call the under taker The only truble with foot ball is that you can't hit no body untill after the ball is past & if it badent of been for that rule I would of made them carry the 2d. man off the field like I made them carry the 1st. man off the field only I dident have time to do so much on acct. of the rules & besides the 2d. man seen what I done to the 1st. man & kind a kept away from me & who could blame him. We give them a good licking & the score was 52 to nothing, but I dident make none of the runs because I was playing gard & they dont let the gards do none of the scoreing but may be next Sun. tommorow I will play ½ back or middle back which is the men that carrys the ball & I will do some scoreing then because if theyd ever give me a hold of that ball they wouldent never stop me untill I was acrost the gool line. But unlest the mgr. of the spartans gets wise to them self may be I wont play tommorow because after the game last Sun. when they give me $5.00 dollars for playing I say it will cost you more money next time & the mgr. says what do you mean more money & I says the only reason why I played for $5.00 dollars was because I dident know weather I could play the game or not but now it would cost them $10.00 per game because I seen where I would be a star at the game & the mgr. says if you seen today where you was going to be a star you must of saw some thing I dident see & I says no you cheap stiff of corse you dident see it because you was to busy geting dimes & ¼ out of the crowd. He says well the crowd dident come acrost with enough dimes & ¼ for me to give you no $10.00 dollars per game & if you wont play for $5.00 dollars you can go & take a jump in the lake meaning Mich. lake. I says you can't make me take no jump in no lake Mich. lake or no other lake & if you dont come acrost with $10.00 dollars next Sun. I wont play on your club & he says well I hate to see the club broke up but we cant pay you no $10.00 per game & thats all there is to it. I says you better think it over and if you want me you will half to come acrost with $10.00 dollars & he says I dont half to do no thinking I can tell you right now that I dont want you no $10.00 dollars worth so I says you better think it over because I won't play for no less & then I left him & went a way from him and I havent herd nothing from him but may be I will hear some thing today or tommorow a m because tommorow p m they got a hard game with the southwest ends & will need there strongest club & where will they be at with out me & whats $10.00 when its a ? of getting beat or wining?

Well Steve I done better in my reglar job this wk. & sold a little beer but the old man dont apresiate nothing because when I went up to the house to see the girl the day I sold the beer and told him a bout selling it he says thats to bad. You shouldent ought to of spoiled your recerd. The girl give me the wink not to say nothing back or I might of give him a peace of my mind. Respy, BILL.

The mgr. says if you sees today where you was going to be a star you must have saw something I diden't see.

The 1st man looked so sick the 1st time I walloped him on the jaw that I was scared they would have to call the under taker.

CADETS DEFEAT NOTRE DAME 20-7

Army Eleven Outplays Catholics in Three of the Four Quarters.

West Point, N. Y., Nov. 7.—[Special.]—The Army smashed Notre Dame here today, winning from the westerners by a score of 20 to 7.

Notre Dame's loose handling of the ball was responsible for a touchdown early in the game, when Cofal muffed one of Hodgson's punts and Goodman fell on it for the Cadets on the fifteen yard line. Hodgson and Benedict then began a bone crushing attack that carried the Army to a score in four plays, Hodgson going through Jones for the score and Benedict kicking goal.

The Army scored again in the same quarter when Butler, who played a star game at tackle, blocked one of Cofal's punts when the latter kicked from behind his goal posts and the ball went straight up for twenty-five feet in the air. When it came down Benedict got it and fell over the line for a score.

By a fine display of offensive work in the third quarter, during which Pliska, Mills, and Cofal starred, Notre Dame took the ball forty yards down the field for a touchdown, Cofal going over on a line plunge and later kicking goal.

Story of Contest.

The Army won the toss and chose the south goal. Cofall kicked off for Notre Dame to Weyand on the Army's thirty-three yard line. Hodgson returned the punt to Cofall, who muffed it on Notre Dame's fifteen yard line. Goodman recovered it for the Army, and in two plays Hodgson took it over for a touchdown. Benedict kicked goal. Score: Army, 7; Notre Dame, 0.

At the beginning of the second period Benedict kicked off for the Army, and, after a series of punts, Hodgson kicked the ball to Notre Dame's five yard line. Notre Dame failed to gain, and punted from behind its goal line. Butler broke through and blocked the punt, and Benedict fell on the ball behind the goal line for a touchdown. The period ended with the ball on Notre Dame's ten yard line. Score: Army, 14; Notre Dame, 0.

Notre Dame Scores.

A sensational run by Pliska from midfield to the Army's fifteen yard line was made during the first few minutes of play in the third period. Bergman carried the ball on the next play to the Army's five yard line. Cofall went over the goal for a touchdown. The Army was penalized twice for offside playing in the latter part of the period. When the whistle blew the ball was on Notre Dame's thirteen yard line.

The Army scored another touchdown in the fourth period, when Hodgson went through the line on the second play to Notre Dame's one yard mark and took the ball over on the next play. Benedict missed goal.

Notre Dame, fighting hard, was swept back again to its one yard line. There it made a stand the Army could not overcome and took the ball away on downs. Lineup:

FORWARD PASS BAFFLES PENN; YOST WINS, 34-3

Open Attack in Second and Third Periods Nets Five Touchdowns.

LOSERS SCORE FIRST.

BY WALTER H. ECKERSALL.
[Referee of the Contest.]

Ann Arbor, Mich., Nov. 7.—[Special.]—Led by the redoubtable Johnny Maulbetsch, one of the best half backs who has graced a chalklined field in the west since the days of Willie Heston, Michigan defeated Pennsylvania today on Ferry field, 34 to 3, and showed the football world that its showing against Harvard a week ago was no fluke.

Michigan gained ground when distance was needed and Maulbetsch was the man who always gained the yards necessary for first down. Michigan's defense was in accordance with its offense and after the opening period in which the Quakers scored their field goal, the visitors were hopelessly outclassed, but they fought gamely against superior odds.

Maulbetsch in Hero Role.

Although all the Wolverines played hard, consistent football, the work of Maulbetsch was the feature. Although a smaller man than Heston, this player was never thrown for a loss in the entire struggle, and he did the heavy part of the offensive work. He ran the ends, drove off the tackles, and hit the line with equal success. Although he was a marked man and Penn had a defense to stop him, his efforts always netted several yards and he scored two of the touchdowns credited to the victors.

A strong wind blew from the west, which gave the team defending this goal a strong advantage. Pennsy won the toss and chose to defend the west goal. An exchange of punts soon put the ball in Michigan territory, and on every exchange the Quakers, by the aid of the wind, had a considerable advantage. As soon as the teams switched goals in the second period, Splawn's toe soon put the Quakers on the defensive until Michigan secured the oval on Penn's forty yard line.

Yost Machine Well Oiled.

From this point Michigan started a successful attack on the visitors' goal line which resulted in Maulbetsch crossing the line for the Wolverines' first score. After this marker had been registered Michigan came on with a rush, and their efforts to gain ground by most any kind of an attack never failed. Forward passes were executed with accuracy and the Wolverines followed the ball with speed and agility. They recovered several fumbles which put them in positions to score and they also took advantage of every mistake made by the Quakers.

Although it is not represented by as strong a team as in former years, today's victory certainly showed the style of football coached by Yost is far superior to the brand taught at the Philadelphia institution. The open running attack was used repeatedly for substantial gains, while old style tactics were employed when short distances were necessary.

Michigan Defense Strong.

On defense the Wolverines braced whenever Penn got as close as thirty-five yards from the goal, and they either took the ball away on downs or else they intercepted the visitors' attempted forward passes.

Tommy Hughitt, the Michigan quarter back, used rare judgment in the selection of his plays and his choice of plays hardly could have been improved upon. With Maulbetsch to carry the ball when distance was needed badly, and with Splawn and Bastian to carry the oval on either first or second downs, Hughitt's judgment was well supported by this sterling trio of backs.

The Michigan line from tackle to tackle showed the results of Germany Schultz's coaching and the Wolverine forward wall was practically impenetrable. Whenever Penn did start to hit the line for continued gains the local forward wall tightened up and the Quakers were forced to send their plays outside of tackle. The Michigan ends smashed these plays before they were hardly started, while the secondary defense nabbed the runners before they got to the scrimmage line.

Pretty Battle at Center.

Capt. Raynsford of Michigan and Capt. Journeay of Pennsylvania, who played center for their respective elevens, put up a pretty battle. There was little to choose between them and both displayed a high class article of offensive and defensive football. Both were played loose and they did considerable tackling on the wings and each intercepted several forward passes.

In giving Pennsylvania the worst beating in the time these two teams have played football against each other Michigan must be given a lot of credit. After playing a hard, grueling schedule and holding Harvard to a 7 to 0 score a week ago, there has been no letup on the part of the players. Keeping a team on edge for the most of the season is a hard matter, and if Cornell is beaten next Saturday on the same field the team will be entitled to all the honor and glory which can be bestowed upon it.

Splawn Only Injured Player.

Before the contest Yost said he thought his team would win if the players recovered from the mental effects of the Harvard game. Although the players did show physical effects of the bruising eastern battle, Trainer Farrell had them in fairly good condition for today's battle, and with the exception of Splawn, who was removed from the battle in the third period because of an injured right ankle, the team came through the struggle in good shape and should be in condition to play a hard game against the big Red team in the last game on the Michigan schedule.

Matthews scored Penn's drop kick in the opening period from the thirty-eight yard line. Michigan did not threaten the visitors' goal in this quarter, but the Wolverine attack was opened up in the next quarter. With the wind at his back Splawn soon put the ball in Penn territory, and Maulbetsch drove off Penn's left tackle for the first score by the local team.

Michigan Rooters Joyful.

The Michigan stands went wild when this score was made, as it looked as if this would be the end of the scoring. After Penn had kicked off Splawn again put the oval in Michigan territory and then he hurled a forward pass to Benton, who scampered over the line for Michigan's second score. Hughitt kicked both goals and the score was Michigan, 14; Penn, 3.

After the next kickoff the Wolverines again started a successful march to the visitors' goal. Forward passes, off tackle drives, and end runs were features of this march, which culminated with Maulbetsch going over for the third touchdown. Hughitt missed the goal and the half ended soon after with Michigan leading by a 20 to 3 score.

At the start of the third period Michigan again had the advantage of the strong wind and the exchanges in punts again left the ball in Penn territory. The Wolverines then started another march to the goal, which terminated with Hughitt bucking through center for a touchdown. The little quarter back added another point to the fast increasing total by kicking goal.

No Scoring in Last Period.

Maulbetsch was the main factor in scoring the last touchdown. He was used on three out of every five attempts to gain ground and he finally plunged off Penn's right tackle for the final score of the game. There was no scoring in the last period, although Michigan had the ball inside of the fifteen yard line on two occasions, but lost it on fumbles.

The day was ideal for football, with the exception of the strong wind, which blew from the west. Twenty thousand persons decked in the colors of the competing elevens filled the two massive stands. It was strictly a college gathering, and the "U. of M.," "O, how he ran," and "Hail to the Victors," was the yell and songs used by the Wolverine rooters to shout defiance at the Penn enthusiasts. Pennsylvania gave its short, snappy yell five times and the Quaker rooters supported their team until the final whistle blew.

Good Feeling Prevails.

True sportsmanship and the best of feeling existed between the players and rooters. Whenever a Penn player was injured the Michigan rooters gave cheers for the disabled player, and the Pennsylvania supporters returned the compliment whenever a Wolverine player was hurt. On the field the players did not employ any rough tactics, although they played hard and fought for every inch of ground.

Generally speaking, it was a great game which will go a long way toward showing easterner's the teams west of the Alleghanies know something about football. Coach Yost has shown himself to be a master of the game. Starting the season with only three old players and inferior material, Yost has organized a team which should be one of the strongest in the country next year.

The experience acquired in this year's games will stand the players in good stead next year, and all indications point to another game with Harvard in addition to the annual battles between Cornell and Pennsylvania. Lineup:

NOTES OF THE GAME.

Ann Arbor, Mich., Nov. 7.—[Special.]—The big concrete stand of the south side of the field was dedicated between halves. Coach Yost and Phil Bartelme were among some of the speakers.

Because of the number of spectators allowed in the inclosure, ground rules were necessary.

There were frequent penalties in the game, and most of them were for holding and use of the hands in the interference.

Pennsylvania left tonight for Detroit, where the team will pass the night. The return trip to Philadelphia will be made tomorrow.

When Michigan scored its first touchdown, several persons in the north stands drew revolvers and saluted Maulbetsch with several volleys.

Dave Fultz, the umpire, was caught in a scrimmage and thrown heavily to the ground. Although slightly stunned, Dave kept out of the mixups afterward.

Yost certainly is proud of his team. He gives his players all the credit, and he said this year's eleven carries out his instructions better than any team of recent years.

With the exception of Splawn, the Michigan players came through the game in good shape. Trainer Farrell expects to have the star kicker in shape for the Cornell game.

Several Cornell scouts were on hand to get a line on Michigan's style of play. They certainly saw enough, and after this victory Michigan will be a hard team to beat next Saturday.

Coach Brooke of the Quaker eleven had no excuses to make after the game. He gave Michigan and Yost all the credit, and said his players displayed all the football they had been taught.

This is the worst beating Penn has received in years, and it was a downhearted team which left for Detroit tonight. It may be some time before the Quakers return the compliment by so decisive a margin.

Bonfires and plenty of red fire are some of the methods employed tonight to celebrate this victory. The students are parading the town and singing praises to Coach Yost, Capt. Raynsford, and the members of the team.

Willie Heston, the great half back of the Michigan teams of 1901 to 1904; "Shorty" McMillan, the former quarter back; Harry Hammond, the end; and Craig were among some of the former Michigan heroes who saw Penn's defeat.

There was a large delegation of Michigan alumni residing in Chicago at the game. The trains which arrived from the Windy City this morning brought at least 500 Chicagoans, while trains from other cities arriving at noon dumped thousands of fans in this town.

When the result of the Harvard-Princeton game was announced, a loud cheer went up from the Wolverine rooters. This game makes Michigan look still better in the eyes of western fans, and Michigan supporters now believe their team to be as strong as any aggregation in the country.

Although he was one of the greatest centers in the history of the game, "Germany" Schultz, the former Michigan center who is coaching the line, becomes more nervous before a game than even the greenest player. Before today's game "Germany" could not eat, and he watched the first half of the game from a point outside of the fence. After it became apparent Michigan would win, Schultz took a seat on the side line with the players.

AURORA ELEVEN DEFEATS ELGIN IN 'PREP' BATTLE

East High Team Survives in Race for State Title by 9 to 0 Victory.

BY KELLOGG M. PATTERSON.
[Referee of the Contest.]

Aurora, Ill., Nov. 7.—[Special.]—Northern Illinois went football mad today. At least 8,000 rabid, howling, horn blowing football fiends captured this town by storm today to watch a stellar encounter between East Aurora High school and Elgin. East Aurora won, 9 to 0. A touchdown and a field goal from the forty-two yard line decided the issue.

It was a game that really justified the interest shown, and, while East Aurora won a glorious victory, there was no shame in the defeat of the boys from the city of famous watches. From the first blast of the whistle Elgin fought every inch of space, and in only one quarter did East High really have the better of the argument. This was the second period, when Aurora made the most of its chances and scored all its points. Aurora appeared to be content with a kicking game.

Aurora Team the Heavier.

Aurora had a little the better of it in the way of weights, but what Elgin lacked in beef it made up for in energy, and only the most stubborn defense on the part of the home boys prevented the Elginites from scoring. In the first quarter and at various times during the second half Elgin spurted down the field with open formations and line plunges until within striking distance, but the scoring punch was not available against East High's defense. Elgin probably lost its best chance to score in the third quarter, when it backed East High against its goal post, and then, changing from the spread formation style of attack, turned to pounding the line, only to lose the ball on downs.

Both teams were well coached and the game was sparkling in clever football. For Aurora Reilly and Pritchard stood forth as the aggressive factors. The former was brilliant in picking the holes in the line, plunging for good gains throughout. He scored the only touchdown. Later Pritchard displayed a well educated toe by scoring a kick from placement on the forty-two yard line. Capt. Schultz distinguished himself at end, and as a whole the line did wonders against the onslaught of the Watchmakers. Others starring on offense were Tomlinson and Young.

Elgin Makes Great Fight.

Elgin deserves great credit for the fight it put up, and of Capt. Rider, Clendenning and Capt. Ray much could be said if space permitted. The defense was good, and on offense the Elgin boys did wonders, gaining probably twice or three times as much ground as East High, which resorted to defensive kicking after it had scored its points.

Today's game was attended by delegations from practically every surrounding interurban point, with eighteen special cars from Elgin and a few from Rockford, Ottawa, and Rock Island. Elgin furnished 200 auto leads, to say nothing of a band of fifty pieces that contested with a home musical aggregation of thirty members. The state championship now is contested by West Aurora High, which beat Naperville in the morning, 127 to 6, and by Champaign High and De Paul academy of Chicago. Lineup:

LONG RUN BY BARRETT.

Ithaca, N. Y., Nov. 7.—[Special.]—Cornell defeated Franklin and Marshall in a hard fought football game today, 26 to 3. The visitors put up a stubborn fight, but could not withstand the rushes of the Cornell backfield.

The Ithacans scored their first touchdown by a series of rushes which netted sixty yards. Barrett scored the second by the most brilliant run of the game, taking a double pass and going fifty-five yards for a touchdown, shaking off five tacklers.

Cornell scored again in the third and in the last period the last score being made on a fifteen yard rush by Philippi, who had been substituted only a few minutes before. Lineup:

Hanover, N. H., Nov. 7.—[Special.]—Dartmouth had a surprisingly easy time with Tufts today, winning by 68 to 0. Tufts showed none of its reputed strength after the first three plays. It took Dartmouth just that long to diagnose the Tufts shift, and aside from that the visitors had nothing. The game was played before the largest crowd that ever attended a football game here. Recovered Fumble After Punt in Third Period Beats Pittsburgh.

PASSES BIG FEATURES.

Pittsburgh, Pa., Nov. 7.—In a game featured by forward passes and long kicks, Washington and Jefferson college defeated the University of Pittsburgh eleven on Forbes field today, 13 to 10. A pretty field goal by Hastings gave Pittsburgh the first score in the second period. Bovill, for W. and J., then scored a touchdown on a long forward pass. A series of line plunges brought Collins across for the local touchdown. At the opening of the third period, W. and J. recovered a fumbled punt and scored the winning touchdown. Lineup:

NO REST FOR MAROONS; STAGG KEEPS MEN BUSY.

The vacant date in the football schedule did not bring any rest to the University of Chicago players yesterday, the men passing the day in the most diligent practice of the season. They attended a workout at Stagg field at 10 o'clock in the morning, running past the lunch hour, and were out again after the meal to practice evolutions under the eye of Coach Stagg.

In the morning drill the "Old Man" spent a great deal of time in diagraming plays for the athletes. Scrimmage was passed up in favor of the more necessary drill on the new formations, and on the weak points noticed by the "Old Man" in the Wisconsin game, and the other grueling battles of this year's schedule. The practice was entirely among the varsity men.

The punting candidates had another day of it yesterday. The men practiced getting down under the high spirals from the boot of Des Jardien and the kicks of Russell and Gordon, both of whom have been figured upon as possible halfbacks for the Illinois encounter. Most of the time in the afternoon drill was put in on forward passing plays, the athletes practicing catching the long throws, while Coach Stagg commented on their work.

LOYOLA TEAM WITHDRAWS FROM MORGAN PARK GAME.

Coach Moore of Loyola academy objected strenuously to Referee Myrick's decision, ousting one of his men in the game against the academy team at Morgan Park today. When the official refused to reverse his decision Moore took his men off the field after the cadets had led, 16 to 0. Previously Eissler's offensive playing featured the contest.

St. Rita of the Catholic High School league defeated the alumni, 20 to 7, on the school gridiron. All of the undergraduate points were made in the opening period. The alumni scored in the third quarter.

Lyons township High school defeated the Ottawa High, 54 to 0, at La Grange yesterday. Fey, Sweet, and Gurke each scored two touchdowns and Mayer and Lane one each. Sweet kicked six goals from touchdown.

LEWIS INSTITUTE LOSES TO CADETS AT DELAFIELD.

Delafield, Wis., Nov. 7.—[Special.]—Coach Fletcher's cadets, playing a fast hard game of football, replete with brilliant passes and trick plays, walked away from Lewis institute, to the tune of 42 to 0. The Cadets soon piled up a total of 21 points. The second quarter Lewis held down the score. The opening of the second half brought hard luck to St. Johns, as three of its backfield were compelled to leave the game because of injury. By hard and consistent playing Lewis held the Cadets even for a few minutes, only to tire and permit the Cadets to again use their scoring machine. Anspach ran his team well and personally gained much ground. West starred on offense and defense. Mucklestone played brilliantly until injured in the second half. Brown at center and Howard at end played good ball for Lewis. Cranton and Gilbert were shining lights. Lineup:

IOWA TEAM BEATS DE PAUL.

Twenty-five pounds of extra poundage to a man proved too much for De Paul academy yesterday, and St. Joseph college of Dubuque, Ia., defeated the locals, 21 to 7, on the north side field. Despite the score, Coach Paupau's youngsters looked upon the result as a victory. De Paul was the first to score, when Grundman's forward pass slipped into Ward's mitt. The local youngster dashed down the field for fifty yards and a touchdown. In the second period the Iowans put in their heavier men and three touchdowns followed. Neither team scored in the second half. Kearns and Ward featured for the locals and Heuser for the visitors. Lineup:

CARROLL BEATS LAKE FOREST

North Shore Team Weak Without Captain and Badgers Win, 23 to 0.

VICTORS START WELL.

Waukesha, Wis., Nov. 7.—[Special.]—Lake Forest was defeated today by the Carroll college eleven, 23 to 0. It was apparent from the outset that the visitors lacked confidence because of the absence of Capt. Dunsmore, but they fought gamely against a well oiled machine.

Coach Fries' men scored a placement goal and a touchdown in the first quarter, the latter being made from the three yard line following spectacular end running. Another count was made in the second period from the thirty yard line, and the third in the last quarter on a buck through left tackle.

The work of the visitors' tackles and T. Krueger was noticeable, while Coach Fries' backfield played stellar ball. Lineup:

TWO GOPHER STARS INJURED.

Minneapolis, Minn., Nov. 7.—[Special.]—Solon, full back, and Erdall, quarter back, have been absent from the Gopher line all week because of injuries. Solon sprained his ankle in the Illinois game, but probably will be in shape for the Wisconsin game on Nov. 14. Whether Erdall will play is extremely doubtful. Diedrich and Haedge have been groomed for his place. The Gophers had an open date today and devoted three hours to secret practice.

Hardwick Counts Touchdown.

On the opening play of the fourth period Hardwick carried the ball over the Princeton line and then kicked the goal, bringing the score to 20—0.

Princeton offered a more open attack in the final period, trying forward passes at long distances. The Harvard defense was ready for the open game, however, and nearly every attempt failed to gain. The contest came to an end as Swigert, the Harvard quarter, intercepted a long forward pass on his twenty-five yard line. Lineup:

PURDUE DOWNS KENTUCKY, 40-6

Lafayette, Ind., Nov. 7.—[Special.]—Although Purdue used many substitutes against Kentucky State in the second half of today's game on Stuart field, the Boilermakers won easily, 40 to 6. Kentucky's score was made in the third quarter, when the entire second team of the Boilermakers was in the game.

Purdue Gains Easily.

In the first half Purdue gained almost at will. A. Brell and Van Aken were the star ground gainers, making runs of twenty-five and thirty-five yards repeatedly. Purdue stuck to old style football. Its only attempts at the open game and forward passing were unsuccessful. Kentucky, on the other hand, used the forward passing game with success when pitted against the Purdue second team.

Routh and Blocker Star.

Routh and Blocker in the Purdue line broke through and threw the Kentucky backs for losses many times. Purdue was penalized often and made two touchdowns that were not allowed. Kentucky's score was made on a forward pass, the ball bounding from one man's hand to another's. Pultz made one spectacular run of fifty yards. There was considerable fumbling. Lineup:

FRISCO CHANGES DATE OF GRAND PRIZE RACE.

The date of the 1915 grand prize automobile road race, which will be run over a course inside the exposition grounds at San Francisco, has been changed from Saturday, March 6, to Feb. 27. No reason is given for the change.

Chicago racing followers believe, however, that the original date left too long a wait for the drivers who will compete in the Vanderbilt, which is scheduled for Feb. 22.

F. E. Edwards, chairman of the technical committee of the Chicago Automobile club, yesterday broke the seals on the bonnet of the Mitchell car which completed a tour of 7,500 miles at the rate of 250 miles a day for thirty consecutive days, and established a world's endurance record when it checked in at Pittsburgh several days ago. Mr. Edwards found the car in wonderful condition after an elaborate examination. There only were two defects found—two loose rivets in the right rear brake band and a bent axle, due to accidentally running over a culvert.

GOLF CUP TO BALLANTYNE.

T. A. Ballantyne of the Daily News won the H. C. Chatfield-Taylor trophy, emblematic of the newspaper golf championship, by defeating Basil Wyrick of the Associated Press yesterday, 3 and 2, in the final at the Windsor Golf club. The runner-up had an allowance of five strokes.

TENNIS EXPERTS ALSO PROVE TO BE GOOD FIGHTERS

NET CHAMPIONS ANSWER TO CALL IN EUROPEAN WAR

Stars of Six Nations in Davis Cup Matches Now in Great Clash.

BY JEWETT E. RICKER JR.

[Vice President Western Lawn Tennis Assn.]

The blow which the European war has dealt amateur sport in England and on the continent is just becoming known in this country. Perhaps the greatest sufferer of all is lawn tennis, as practically every player of prominence outside of the United States has entered service for one or the other of the warring nations. Every player who competed in the Davis cup matches last summer, except the American team, either is actively engaged in the war or is preparing to go.

Throughout Europe all tennis events have been called off since August and large funds have been raised by the tennis players to assist their nations in the war. A. W. Gore, former champion of England, conceived the unique idea of getting the tennis players of England to turn in their prizes for money to be used in the Prince of Wales' fund.

In the Davis cup matches last summer seven nations competed—Australasia, British isles, France, Germany, Belgium, Canada, and the United States. Six of these countries are involved in the war.

Wilding Now Lieutenant.

Press dispatches already have informed us that Anthony F. Wilding, the great New Zealander, has been advanced to a lieutenancy in the British army because of distinguished gallantry at the front. Wilding returned to England immediately after his team had wrested the Davis cup from the United States and received a commission in Winston Churchill's special corps of Royal marines. He was placed in charge of one of England's armored motor cars and probably gained his promotion by active fighting with the Belgian defenders at the fall of Antwerp.

Norman E. Brookes, Wilding's teammate and tennis champion of England, is reported in France, where he will operate a motor ambulance.

Stanley N. Doust, another member of the Australasian team, is at work in the Argyll Motor factory in England, where he is receiving preparation for active service with the army transport corps. A. T. Dunlop plans to join one of the Australian regiments.

J. C. Parke in Battle.

Of the British isles team, J. C. Parke, the great Irish player, is a lieutenant with the Leinster regiment and probably has been on the firing line before this. His teammate, Theodore Michel Mavrogordato, has joined the public school corps and is in training for active service. Arthur Lowe, who fought Wilding so closely in their great match at Boston, also enlisted in the British army.

A. R. F. Kingscote, the fourth member of England's Davis cup team, has long been a lieutenant in the regular British Indian army, and at last reports was instructing Kitchener's new army at Gosport.

Aside from the Davis cup team, practically every tennis player of any consequence in England is at the front, and many have been in the thick of the fighting in France. G. W. Hillyard, for instance, is a trooper in the Third County of London yeomanry; Hope Crisp, Kenneth Powell, and C. J. Tindell-Green are with the "H. A. C."; N. S. B. Kidston is with the Yorkshire Light infantry; Dr. William V. Eaves is in active service at Woolwich, and R. J. McNair is captain in the East Surrey regiment.

Probably, the men who have seen the toughest service, granting that they are still alive, are the great French players. Andre H. Gobert, for instance, who has long been the leading player of France, was just completing his three years' term in the French army when the war broke out; consequently he was one of the first sent to the front.

Gobert is a "marechal du logis" in the French artillery service, and is in charge of one of the batteries of heavy guns. When the war broke out he was located at Toulon, France, and is believed to have joined the army of Paris in its great fight along the Marne.

The other leading French players, Max Germot and Max Decugis, the team that played the British isles in the recent Davis cup matches, also received commissions in the French army, and at last reports were in active service.

Belgians Army Officers.

Belgium's team consisted of a number of army officers, and it is reasonably certain that Paul de Sorman, A. G. Watson, W. H. Duvivier, and others have long since carved their names in the history of the Belgian army.

Germany's Davis cup team, consisting of Herren O. Froitzheim and Oscar Kreutzer, probably suffered the strangest fate of all. Both players, while returning to Germany from the United States on the steamer Amerika, were captured by British officers, and have since been held as prisoners at Gibraltar.

The other two leading players, Hermann Kleinschroth and Friedrich Wilhelm Rahe, were at last reports in the hottest part of the fighting in Europe, both having received commissions in the army.

Dr. Otto Nirrnheim, the leading tennis official of the German tennisbund, was early conspicuous at the front, where, while fighting as lieutenant in the Grenadier regiment 110, he received a serious wound in his right arm. He has since recovered from this injury and is again with his regiment at the front.

JOCKEY HURT IN RACE DIES.

Shreveport, La., Nov. 7.—[Special.]—Frank Pounder, a jockey employed by Mrs. J. M. Marquette of New York, died in the Shreveport sanitarium today of injuries received at the state fair races on Thursday when his mount, Ivy Marquette, named after the daughter of his employer, fell and crushed him. Two other horses fell in the race, but their jockeys escaped serious injury. Pounder's body will be shipped to New York for interment. The accident placed a damper on the races during the last two days.

HUNTING BIG GAME by NEAL BROWN

[Copyright: 1914: By Neal Brown.]

THIS imposing title is not a prelude to an imperial theme. It is used merely for the purpose of calling a more avid attentiont to sundry chronicles of small deer. For here in the middle west we are far from the habitat of big game. Our fauna is of a scatheless sort and gives us no chance for great adventure. So we must needs be content with small adventure, with small thrills and encounters that do not prove our mettle. Yet with the aid of vivid imagination much contentment may be derived from the encounters of minor sport.

Not so long ago I was invited by certain sportsmen to join a new forming sportsmen's club, with the asssurance that it was to be a sort of a thirty-second degree institution, manned by sportsmen who had either hunted "big game" or had performed notable deeds in the line of fictional and narratory sport. As I had not then put out these memoirs of sport, I had to admit that I could not assume the last of the requisite qualifications, and as for the first, I had never killed anything bigger or more ferocious than certain amber eyed deer that inadvertently walked upon my unerring rifle.

I was assured by the committee that this was ample to qualify me, and so I became a free and accepted brother. I felt better, however, when I discovered among the brethren a few sportsmen who had at one time and another angled for trout under my supervision, and whose lives were innocent of any greater adventure.

It was some solacement also to find that an ex-president belonged to the club, although in the capacity of an honorary and absentee membership. Every good American highly values his intimacies with ex-presidents. Other notables in the membership of this club have hunted grizzly bears and numberless other ferocities. My familiarity with these has been confined to sightseeing in various menageries.

At club merrymakings, I have been forced to modestly listen to tales of hairbreadth 'scapes on flood and field, not envious of another's fame, yet wishing that I might have been born under a more portentous star, so that I could now and then have faced a Hyrcan tiger or some other jungle horror. In trying to make much of little, I would say that deer hunting is the greatest of our small adventures.

In this late autumn of the year, thousands of sportsmen are planning for their annual deer hunt, regarding this as almost a matter of religious faith. Cases are being continued, courts are preparing for adjournment, important interfering affairs, shelved, and all of life's activities are being mobilized for the fray. Unhappy is the sportsman whose wedding day anniversary, or wife's birthday, makes unwished for appearance during the first week of the open season.

Can he afford to forego tender, thoughtful acknowledgment, or secure reconcilement by the invention of blandishment and tribute? And if, still kind and tolerant, although knowing all his deceits and conceits and inventions, she has anxious forebodings that he may be mistaken for a deer by some dull eyed hunter, how can this embarrassed sportsman quiet her alarms and obtain her clear consent? If he cannot command the occasion, he may enjoy the painful pleasure of dreaming about the unattainable outing. For next to the joy of full achievement in sport is the happiness of preparing for it and dreaming about it.

Speaking of preparedness, I am minded to say that a deer hunter should obey certain cardinal rules. He should equip himself with a hunting knife and an extra pocketknife for the emergency of a lost hunting knife. He should never be without a compass and a waterproof box of matches. A little bottle of salt may be valuable. This last in case he is lost and must stay out all night. He may wish to broil a piece of venison from the deer he has killed. He will, of course, have all the other conventional equipment, not forgetting to take plenty of cartridges. If he is lost he may need many for signaling purposes.

He should never go into any country without carefully noting all landmarks, and be prepared to locate himself at all times.

A sportsman without a good, fair sized bump of location should never go deer hunting at all. Now and then comes a hunter into the deer country who would lose himself in a ten acre lot.

If you, who have this bump fairly developed, should get lost, don't run around like a madman. Sit down and smoke your pipe and try to think it out. If you cannot solve the problem and night is close at hand, make up your mind to the worst, which, after all, is not so bad for a healthy hunter. Kindle a good fire, before which you may sit with your back to a radiating tree or log, and stay there until help comes. You will, of course, signal with your rifle as the occasion warrants.

A rifle shot by day does not mean anything, but a rifle shot after dark is a sign of great significance and warning. Several rifle shots after dark emphasize the situation and are always treated as a call for help. I was once lost for an hour or two in a big swamp, with night coming on. I knew in a general way where I was, but I did not know that I could get out before dark. With a network of spring brooks all about me, traveling after dark was impossible. (A diagram of this happening will be furnished on application.) As it was I maintained an anxious cheerfulness, trying to live up to the best traditions of the lost until my noisy companions called me to safety.

Every camp should have a code of signals for the lost. A bonfire on a hill near camp is a good safety signal for the belated hunter.

One rule should be inexorable with hunters: Don't shoot at any object unless you are absolutely certain that it is not a human being. Through obedience to this rule you may now and then lose a deer, but it is better to lose a deer than to lose a brother sportsman. If this rule were always obeyed it would diminish the number of hunting accidents by two-thirds.

Never carry your gun cocked. A hunter who cannot cock his gun or throw off the safety catch in time to be effective after sighting his quarry had better give up hunting. Once on a time I found myself hunting side by side with a certain sportsman, and finally noticed that he was carrying his heavy double barrel at full cock.

I vigorously expostulated with him, but he stubbornly refused to change his tactics and blandly assured me that in his experienced hands it was impossible that the gun could go off except by his design. I watched him anxiously, uncertain what to do, until a few minutes later when he stepped on a treacherous log and fell headlong. His gun, with both hammers at full cock, was hurled end over end far in front of him, being aimed at me during various angles of its flight. Happily the gun was not discharged, although having every temptation so to do. Consequently, and with great promptitude, I left him, sadder and less cocky.

When the need of keeping your gun loaded is over it should always be examined religiously and every shell taken out. If a scintilla of doubt still exists in your mind, examine it again to make sure.

In the camp where I hunt deer we keep a relay of Indian ponies to ride and to pack in our deer. These ponies are most intelligent and dependable companions and are tough and hardy and accustomed to winter out of doors and to forage for themselves. They will not seek the shelter of a stable even in the coldest weather. They prefer brush to the choicest hay.

BASEBALL HEADS MAY TALK PEACE

Garry Herrmann to Confer with Weeghman Regarding New Moves.

GO TO OMAHA TONIGHT.

BY I. E. SANBORN.

Chairman Herrmann of the national commission is expected in Chicago tomorrow to join Presidents Johnson of the American league and Comiskey of the White Sox on the trip to Omaha to attend the annual meeting of the minor league body in that city beginning next Tuesday. Before leaving for the west Herrmann probably will have another conference with President Weeghman of the Chifeds to exchange reports on the movement to arrange a working agreement between organized baseball and the Federal league.

What progress has been made may be ascertained after this conference, but if anything has been accomplished President Weeghman effectively ducked disclosing it by spending yesterday playing golf.

All of the American league club owners who came here to attend the annual meeting left yesterday or the night before for their homes, Frank Farrell of New York being the last to depart. He was in conversation with Messrs. Johnson and Comiskey yesterday, but no definite developments in the rehabilitation of the New York club were made known.

Several minor league officials came to town to be on hand for the getaway to Omaha, which will be made by special train tonight from La Salle street station.

PURPLERUNNERS BEAT MAROONS

POINT SCORE: 26 TO 29.

BY MAROON.

Northwestern university runners defeated the Maroon cross country team in a dual run at the Midway yesterday, finishing with twenty-six points, while the Chicago harriers acquired twenty-nine. Campbell of the Maroon squad led the field home, completing the five mile course in 26:20. The record for the run is held by Jimmy Lightbody of the Maroons, who set a mark of 25:36 in 1905.

Capt. Osborne of the Purple team was second, with Prasler of Northwestern in third place. Capt. Stout and Goodwin landed the next two positions for the Maroons, then Kraft, Porter, and Brasmer of Northwestern filed home in that order. Powers and Morris of the Midway delegation brought up the rear of the men whose points were counted in the final totaling.

A big crowd saw the athletes start over the Midway course and travel from Jackson to Washington park. Another gathered awaiting the scantily club runners as they crossed the finish mark in front of President Judson's residence on the Midway.

ILLINI RUNNERS IN FRONT.

Urbana, Ill., Nov. 7.—Illinois' cross country runners completely outclassed Indiana today, five Illini finishing ahead of the Hoosier quintet. Mason and Wright of Illinois tied for first in 22:21 2-5. Wray, Billman, Burgoon, and Minnis came next. The Hoosiers finished in this order: Gray, Marquart, Ikens, Foncannon, Wallace. The Illini were not pressed which accounts for the slow time.

RACE TO CORNELL RUNNERS.

Philadelphia, Pa., Nov. 7.—The Cornell cross country team today defeated the University of Pennsylvania hill and dale men, 28 to 85. The first seven to finish were Cornell men. Potter finished first in 28:10.

GOPHER RUNNERS WINNERS.

Minneapolis, Minn., Nov. 7.—The University of Minnesota took the first five places in the dual cross country run with the University of Wisconsin today. Six men composed each team. The distance, five miles, was covered in 27:14¼.

Harvard Harriers Beat Yale.

Cambridge, Mass., Nov. 7.—Harvard harriers defeated the Yale cross country team today in their annual dual hill and dale run, 7 to 28. J. W. Ovington of Yale made the 5⅝ miles over a varied course in 33:07 2-5.

BIG NINE SETS AQUATIC DATES

FOUR COLLEGES ARE IN.

Swimming coaches from the Big Nine universities drew up their winter schedule of meets at a session in Bartlett gymnasium at the University of Chicago yesterday. The schedule will provide for seven dual meets between the aquatic teams of Chicago, Northwestern, Illinois, and Wisconsin, and a quadrangular contest between swimmers of the four schools as the final event of the season. All meets will come in the months of January, February, and March. The schedule follows:

Jan. 23—Illinois vs. Wisconsin at Madison and Northwestern vs. Chicago at Bartlett gymnasium.

Feb. 12—Wisconsin vs. Chicago at Chicago.

Feb. 13—Wisconsin vs. Northwestern at Evanston.

Feb. 27—Chicago vs. Illinois at Champaign.

March 5—Chicago vs. Northwestern at Evanston.

March 13—Northwestern vs. Illinois at Champaign.

March 19—Conference meet. Place to be decided at a later conference of the coaches.

Coaches White of Chicago, Robinson of Northwestern, Manley of Illinois, and Hinman of Wisconsin attended the meeting.

The coaches recommended the adoption of water basketball as a regular conference sport, the games to be played in connection with the dual meets. At the conference meet the two teams having the highest record in the number of games won will compete for the conference championship. Captains will be elected for the water basketball teams in each school, as well as for swimming teams.

A change in the rules under which the games will be played was made by the coaches. The ball to be used in the intercollegiate matches this year will be the international water soccer ball, a round leather ball. The ball used in contests last year, the season of the introduction of the sport, was a smaller rubber sphere.

SKAT LEAGUE MEETS TODAY.

A meeting of the officers and directors of the North American Skat league has been called for today at the Lincoln Turner hall at 2 o'clock, when a date will be set for holding the next tournament in the city of Peoria, that city being awarded the honor of receiving the next tournament. All former directors at the last tournament, in Milwaukee, have been reelected, with the exception of Henry Getz, who has been succeeded by A. I. Lauer to represent the state of Illinois.

East and west score small slam.

*Wins trick.

Answer—The opening bid was very bad, as all bids of this character are apt to be. West should have bid one no-trump. The bid of two diamonds by south was incredibly bad and it is difficult to understand why west should pass such a bid instead of going to two no trump or doubling the two diamonds. South made about as many tricks as he had a right to expect with such a holding. Whether north should have taken his partner out with three clubs depended entirely upon the opinion north held of his partner's bidding. Beggar your partner would be a better title than auction bridge for this variety.

BY RAY C. PEARSON.

Seldom has it been the good fortune of any fighting man to get the chance that Chicago's sterling lightweight, Charley White, is handed tomorrow night in the ring of the Queensberry Athletic club of Milwaukee, where he meets Freddie Welsh. It is the second chance for White to win the world's title within a period of six months.

Just a little more than five months ago—May 26 to be exact—this same Charley White staked his claim to fame in a ten round battle against Willie Ritchie, then champion, in the same ring in which he fights tomorrow night. He "blew" that chance for after smashing the champion on the jaw with his famous left hook in the first round, a smash that badly dazed the titleholder and made him wobbly in the legs, White tore in to put the finishing touches to the job. That was where the Chicago fighter made his mistake.

Fails to Land "Kayo."

There were few at the ringside who expected to see Ritchie escape a knockout. His condition indicated that he could not recover if White landed a brace of left hooks to the jaw and that he would go down and out. But White never again found the spot that he hit in the first round because of his overanxiousness to bring the battle to a close. He let go hurriedly time and again with his left and he sent his right over for the jaw just as many times. The blows landed, but every one was too high to do the damage for which they are intended.

That these blows were forceful enough to have brought a knockout victory was evident from Ritchie's appearance when he left the ring. Both his eyes were nearly closed, there was a gash across the bridge of his nose and he was bleeding from the mouth when the gong at the end of the tenth round sounded.

White won that fight and the title by farther than Ritchie would care to mention, but he could not become champion because the laws of Wisconsin do not permit decisions.

That was chance No. 1 for Charley White.

Must Knock Out Welsh.

Tomorrow night will find White facing a new champion under conditions akin to those of his battle with Ritchie. He must score a knockout to win the world's championship. This task, No. 2, is colossal, but far from the impossible. Everything depends on one thing and that one thing is the ability of White to land. If Charley does land the bout may not go many rounds and Chicago may be able to boast of a world's titleholder on Tuesday morning.

If White hooks his left to Welsh's jaw as hard as he did to Ritchie's he should score a victory that will discount the Badger law, for Charley will not make the mistake that he made five months ago. He will not rush the Britisher and land his blows on the cheek bones, the nose, and the sides of the head. He will set sufficiently to take correct aim before he lets go with either hand, principally his left, for it is that member that carries the force that "brings home the bacon."

In case White does manage to connect with Welsh's jaw it would not guarantee him a knockout victory, for there is something else that the Chicago boy must overcome. All the world knows that the Britisher is a past master in cleverness, and the natural thing for him to do in case he is "stung" would be to stall, cover up, and fall back entirely on defensive milling as a means of protection until he had recovered from the effects of the punch. In doing that Welsh might prevent White from scoring a knockout, but he would lose the popular decision if forced to stall for any great number of rounds.

White does not quite agree with those who think the champion will be able to employ cleverness to such an extent that it will prevent White scoring a knockout. For a long time the critics have been telling of how he is handicapped if his opponent forces him to take any equal hand in the game of leading. Right here it might be said that White has fought his best battles against opponents who have come to him. It was that way in his fight with Ritchie, for in every round Willie did the leading and Charley waited for him to let go with his right before countering.

Charley Willing to Lead.

While admitting this waiting battle has been successful, White declares it is not necessary that he employ it. He believes that he can hit any opponent, regardless of his cleverness, and he also knows that when he connects he will inflict punishment. Therefore Charley may be expected to go after Welsh in case the latter decides to take a hand in the waiting game.

White is not afraid of anything in the way of blows that the champion may send in his direction. These ultra-clever boys seldom carry the steam behind their punches that produces the ten second sleep. Welsh belongs in this class, but since becoming champion he has announced that he will disprove the claim that he can not knock out opponents. He tried his best only recently in his battles with Matty Baldwin at Boston and Ad Wolgast at New York, but he failed to stop either of them, although he handed a fierce beating to Baldwin. If he could not stop either of these boys it is hard to see where he can get way with it with White, who always has shown ability to assimilate punishment.

Champion Depends on Points.

The "dope" shows that the champion has won many battles simply by "stealing" them on cleverness. He perhaps is well aware of how dangerous a foe White is and will work entirely on the clever reel in the effort to outpoint the Chicagoan. That would appear to be the safest sort of milling for Welsh, for if he really believes that he can knock out Charley and opens up in the necessary effort he will take a chance of being knocked out himself. Welsh is too foxy to take that chance. He will stab Charles in the face with his left, but he will use extreme care in what he does with his right.

Welsh and White are two fighters—and there are few of them in the game—who are capable of changing style to meet the attack of the opposition.

When Willie Ritchie fought Ad Wolgast in Milwaukee less than a year ago the house amounted to a trifle over $39,000, which was a world's record for a ten round no decision contest. Welsh and White may establish a new mark as a drawing card, for the advance sale indicates that the fans will spend more than $40,000 to see the bout.

Pork and Beans?

INNOCENT youngsters of sturdy build, reading of the big purses dragged down by the stars of the pugilistic world, are wont to imagine that a fighter's life is one long, sweet dream. There's a shady side to the avenue to success, however. Only recently the promoter of a "private show" called up the manager of a local gymnasium and asked to be shipped a finish wrestling match and a finish fight—a fight to a knockout. For the two "acts" he was willing to pay the princely sum of $20. Did the "fixer" turn him down? He did not. He agreed to furnish two wrestlers and two fighters for the said $20, and confided that he would profit $10 himself by the arrangement, leaving the other $10 to be split among the four athletes.

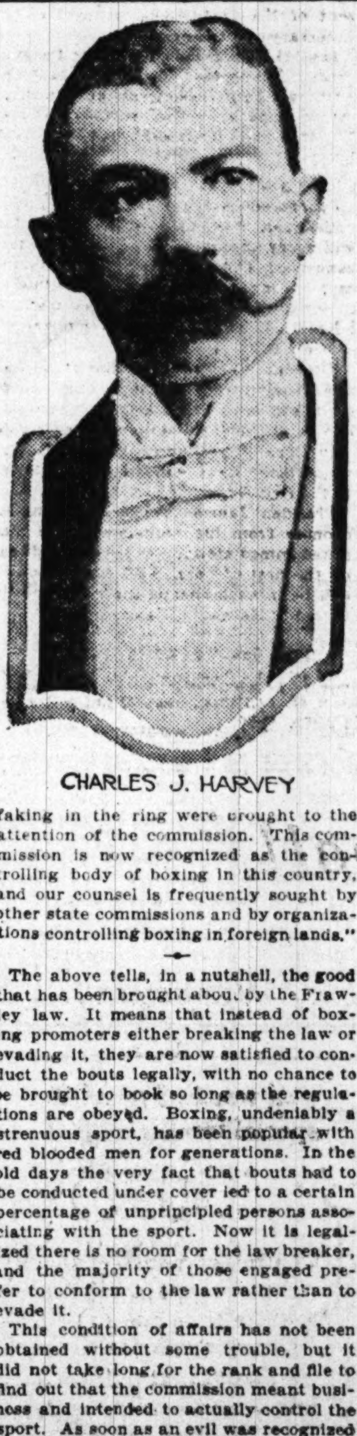
The accompanying article is the first of a series which will appear in these columns dealing with boxing conditions in the twenty-five largest cities of the United States. They will enable unbiased readers to judge for themselves whether or not Illinois is behind the times in failing to frame regulatons for the government of glovemen. There is no law regulating boxing in Illinois. The Illinois state legislature meets in January.



CHARLES J. HARVEY

BY CHARLES J. HARVEY.

[Secretary New York State Athletic Commission.]

THREE years of government of boxing as a legalized sport has brought about a wonderful difference in the state of New York from the times when bouts were held in any hole and corner in an effort to evade the law. When the law regulating boxing and permitting bouts under the control of the state athletic commission went into effect on July 25, 1911, it was more or less of an experiment. There were plenty of people interested in sports who insisted that boxing with or without a commission would not stand the test, and that crookedness would crop out, no matter how strict the law was made.

That Senator Frawley builded better than he knew when he framed the statute for which he fought for six years has now been proved to the satisfaction of every fair minded critic. Boxing today is running along as smoothly as any other well regulated business, and each session of the governing commission sees less and less in the way of infraction of the rules to deal with. The secret of this success is in the factor "control." Through the commission every person taking part in a boxing match, officiating or witnessing the same, has to answer to the state of New York through the members of the commission. The power of the commission is absolute, and so far has been exercised without fear or favor.

When the law first went into effect there was a rush on the part of the many men desiring to make money out of the sport, and though licenses were issued only after careful investigation the result was the institution of more clubs than the sport could normally support. A total of 137 licenses were issued, but as water will find its level, the overplus has been disposed of, and only those which tried for and deserved the confidence of the public remain.

The experience of the past three years has demonstrated that all boxing needed was supervision; that is, supervision with power to enforce the law. Without attempting to be arbitrary the commission has insisted on the rules being observed to the letter. Boxers, clubs, and even spectators are answerable to the commission, and swift punishment is meted when the rules are flagrantly broken.

Just how well the law has worked may be gleaned from the following extract from the commission's report accepted by the legislature at the beginning of the present year.

"We are pleased to say that boxing has advanced materially since this commission was created in 1911, and the sport is now more popular than at any time in its history. This is due to the wise administration of the law by the commission, and the fact that all the clubs licensed to conduct boxing exhibitions work in harmony with the commission and live up to both the letter and spirit of the law. Infractions of the law are so infrequent that we have none to report for the current year, but there have been violations of the rules and regulations, which were promptly investigated and adjudicated. No cases of shamming or faking in the ring were brought to the attention of the commission. This commission is now recognized as the controlling body of boxing in this country, and our counsel is frequently sought by other state commissions and by organizations controlling boxing in foreign lands."

The above tells, in a nutshell, the good that has been brought about by the Frawley law. It means that instead of boxing promoters either breaking the law or evading it, they are now satisfied to conduct the bouts legally, with no chance to be brought to book so long as the regulations are obeyed. Boxing, undeniably a strenuous sport, has been popular with red blooded men for generations. In the old days the very fact that bouts had to be conducted under cover led to a certain percentage of unprincipled persons associating with the sport. Now it is legalized there is no room for the law breaker, and the majority of those engaged prefer to conform to the law rather than to evade it.

This condition of affairs has not been obtained without some trouble, but it did not take long for the rank and file to find out that the commission meant business and intended to actually control the sport. As soon as an evil was recognized the commission took steps to stamp it out, and the consequence is that at the present time every one in any way connected with boxing in the state of New York is provided for in the rules and answerable to the commission.

Buildings in which bouts are held must be approved. This means clean, well lighted and well ventilated buildings, instead of the dingy rooms which obtained when bouts were conducted under the evasion of the law by which competing boxers were introduced as "both members of this club." Care is also taken to see that the buildings are not overcrowded, and the public is also protected by the rule which forbids the raising of prices after they are once announced.

The rule that no decisions shall be given has worked well and has done a good deal to eliminate the faking and double crossing that at one time brought the game into disrepute. Another way to curb the gambling which is detrimental to most sports is the provision that no betting is allowed. This is strictly enforced and inspectors are present to see that no wagers are made at the ringside.

Control of the officials is another important factor. All referees are appointed by the commission and are compelled to accept the commission's interpretation of the rules under which bouts shall be conducted. Moreover, doctors with medical experience of at least five years have been appointed and they are required to examine every contestant, greatly diminishing the chance of injury or fatality. As a matter of fact, there has only been one death in the ring since the law went into effect, notwithstanding that bouts are being held nightly in all parts of the state. Official inspectors see that all rules of the commission are lived up to and that the bouts are conducted in an orderly manner.

So far as faking goes, the last report of the commission indicates that it has practically been stamped out. Early in the life of the commission there were a few cases, but the discipline of six months' suspension inflicted on Abe Attel for not doing his best in a bout with "Knockout" Brown served to show the crafty brigade that those tactics would not be tolerated. Managers who broke their contracts with boxers have been quickly brought to book, and, in fact, the commission is ready to investigate at all times the complaints of boxers, promoters or spectators. The commission has the power in case of any suspected wrongdoing on the part of either boxers or promoters to inform the management to hold up the gate receipts, and, if necessary, the money received from a fake bout would be refunded to the public.

Though the principal good done by the commission is providing the public with a stirring sport, cleanly conducted, the law has been a considerable benefit to the state financially. Instead of having to pay out big amounts to pursue men who broke the laws against boxing exhibitions, the sport now is an actual source of revenue. The gross receipts from boxing exhibitions during the three years that the Frawley law has been working is between $2,000,000 and $3,000,000. This means that the state has collected about $150,000 in taxes during that period. At the same time the public is able to see better contests at lower prices than under the old conditions.

Future benefits expected to develop are calculated to add to the strength and well-being of the nation. Largely through the efforts of the boxing commission boxing has been included in the Olympic games program. Educational institutions are taking up the sport, and the time is believed not far distant when all schoolboys will be encouraged in the practice of the manly art, made as clean as it is wholesome, and beneficial from a physical standpoint.

WHITE ENDS HARD WORK FOR BOUT WITH WELSH.

While Champion Freddie Welsh was going through his training stunts in Milwaukee, Charley White, his opponent of Monday night in the Brewery city, cut loose at high speed in his boxing at O'Connell's gymnasium yesterday. It was the final hard day's work for the local scrapper and he showed that he was glad of it by the way he "opened up." White boxed six rounds, two each with Jimmy Travers, Frankie Sanders, and George Williams.

When he finished his work for the day White announced he was as fit as he ever was for a battle. Today as will take just enough work to keep limbered up and tomorrow will do nothing. White plans to take a train for Milwaukee at 11 o'clock tomorrow morning.

Freddie Welsh will be back in Chicago Tuesday morning. It was learned yesterday that he had signed a contract to appear at a west side theater for a week.

INVADERS LOSE MAT CONTESTS

BY JACK PROCTOR.

Two burly foreign grapplers, Ilias Govederica, Servian champion, and Ortonovicz, the Hungarian giant, made their initial appearances in the west at the opening show of the season at the Chicago Athletic association last night. Both were defeated, Pat Connolly, the Hibernian champion, winning from Govederica in straight falls in 24:18 and 12:14, while William Demetral threw Ortonovicz in 2:35 and 1:05.

The Servian Hercules outweighed the Irishman by twenty pounds, but lacked speed. Connolly was the aggressor most of the time. He won the first fall with a body scissors, and wrist lock and the second with a similar hold.

Demetral Easy Victor.

Both these bouts were tame in comparison with the three fall bout in which Otogawa, billed as champion of Japan, defeated "Mysterious Waffles." Otogawa used jiu jitsu as far as the referee would let him, and Waffles retaliated. Occasionally they kicked each other in the shins and varied this by rushing attacks in which both of them fell all over the mat. The Jap won the first fall in 9:15, but Waffles pinned him in 7:22 with a scissors and collar hold in the second fall. Otogawa won the final fall in twenty-four minutes with a headlock.

Ernest Kartje won in straight falls from Ole Donaldson, a Finnish wrestler, who showed a lot of skill in getting away from some dangerous holds. Kartje won in 11:10 and 7:18.

White Gives Exhibition.

Charley White, who will meet Freddie Welsh, the lightweight champion, skipped the rope, did some shadow boxing, and with Denny Troubles illustrated some of the blows White will aim at the Welshman tomorrow night.

PICK STOUT AS REFEREE FOR WHITE-WELSH BOUT.

Milwaukee, Wis., Nov. 7.—[Special.]—Harry Stout, the Milwaukee referee, has been selected to officiate at the Auditorium Monday night when Charley White of Chicago and Freddie Welsh meet in their championship bout. The names of George Ryan and Walter Houlehan also were mentioned, but Stout was given the preference. Welsh's training today consisted of a short spin on the road in the morning. In the afternoon he boxed at Larkin's gymnasium. Freddie Andrews, Wolgast's sparring partner, donned the mitts with the champion.

AL M'COY OUTPOINTS ERNE.

Philadelphia, Pa., Nov. 7.—[Special.]—Al McCoy, the Brooklyn middleweight, earned the verdict over the veteran "Yi Yi" Erne at the National A. C. tonight. Erne let the Brooklynite do most of the leading, but at times he showed a slight flash of form that completely outclassed the visitor.

CRANE TRIUMPHS OVER LANE, 26-7

BY KEENE GARDINER.

Crane Tech. continued in its march toward the Chicago league lightweight championship by downing Lane, 26 to 7 in the deciding game of the northern division, at Tigers field yesterday. Because of its victory Crane will meet the winner of the southern section in the titular contest, to be played on Nov. 21. Bowlin picked up a fumble after four minutes of play and raced ninety yards for a touchdown; then Lane quit scoring for the day.

The contest, as predicted, was as ferocious as the name of the park in which it was played. First it took 3:25:00 by the watch to play the contest, and most of this time was taken out for "S O S" calls by the injured and weary athletes. Bartes of Crane was knocked out four times and fainted twice—and he finished the combat. Several others showed blackened eyes, a few banged up knees, and one or two displaced ribs. Yes, Crane is glad it will not have to play for two weeks. Lineup:

While the above was happening to its lightweights Crane was being run over by Englewood, 32 to 0, in the heavyweight clash at American Giants' park. The contest was in the nature of a workout for the championship contest with Wendell Phillips at Stagg field next Saturday morning. Two touchdowns was the net total in the first quarter, one in the second, nothing in the third, and two more in the final. Not until the last period did Englewood uncork its open plays, and then used them with success. Lineup:

CURLEY SAILS FOR LONDON.

New York, Nov. 7.—Sailing on the American line steamer St. Louis today, Jack Curley, who is promoting the proposed fight between Jack Johnson and Jess Willard, expects to get Johnson's signature to the articles of agreement in London. Curley will meet Johnson there. He expects Johnson to ask $30,000 and 50 per cent of the picture privileges. Curley said he was willing to meet this figure, and that several places had already put in bids for the fight.

OAK PARKERS ANNEX SCALP OF EVANSTON

Near Fifth League Title by 14 to 6 Victory in Hard Fight.

PHELPS OVER TWICE.

BY PREP.

Oak Park's bid for its fifth consecutive high school title remains to be disputed by only University High, and the Suburban league stage now has been cleared for the battle between these two teams next Saturday. Oak Park eliminated another obstacle from its path yesterday when it downed Evanston High, 14 to 6, in a stubbornly fought combat on Phipps field.

Not until the final quarter, when Oak Park scored its second touchdown, was the result certain for the western suburbanites. Evanston pressed hard and frequently, but waywardness of the oval in the first period robbed Evanston of nine points, as three attempts at field goals went wide. Six more points also were lost when Evanston, with the ball on Oak Park's three yard line, suffered a fifteen yard penalty for holding.

Phelps was the offensive hero for Oak Park, scoring both markers. In the first period he plunged through from the four yard line after a forward pass, with Royal on the receiving end, made the touchdown possible. Royal kicked goal. In the third session Ellingwood made the Evanston points by going over from the six yard line from a split formation. Two spread plays previously had worked the ball down the field. Five minutes before the final whistle Phelps made the last touchdown for the home team and Royal kicked his second goal. Lineup:

Thornton, 20; New Trier, 14.

Thornton scored its first league success, downing New Trier, 20 to 14, in the feature game of a double bill at Harvey. Thornton won because of its final punch with which it counted two touchdowns in the fourth quarter. Previously New Trier had accumulated its fourteen points by means of touchdhowns in the first and third stanzas. Lineup:

Morgan Park, 59; Thornton, 0.

Morgan Park lightweights assured themselves of a place in the final for the championship by trouncing Thornton, 59 to 0, in the opening clash at Harvey. At half time the score was 44 to 0. Herriot featured the attack with six touchdowns, and Edwards made the other three. Morgan Park will meet the Oak Park midgets for the minor crown next Saturday. Lineup:

CLABBY-CHIP BOUT GATE REPORTED TO BE $12,784.

San Francisco, Cal., Nov. 7.—[Special.]—Receipts of the Clabby-Chip middleweight bout last night were $12,784, which is considered good money under the conditions. No announcement has been made of the fashion in which the money was cut. Clabby was working on a guarantee and percentage basis as well. It is likely the boxers received in the neighborhood of $7,000 for their services, and Clabby's share doubtless was about $4,2

Chip has offers from New Orleans and New York to meet some middleweights and the chances are he will take them. Clabby hasn't decided just what he will do. Theatrical offers, both here and in the east, are under consideration.

Sam Langford and Harry Wills of New Orleans, negro heavyweights, will fight here Thanksgiving day. This contest had been hanging fire for several weeks.

WOLGAST HURT BEFORE BOUT

Cadillac, Mich., Nov. 7.—[Special.]—Ad Wolgast, local battler, was knocked out today for the first time in his career. Dr. O. L. Ricker did it with a little anaesthetic. Then he set a broken bone in Wolgast's right arm. Dr. Ricker, after using the X-ray, said that Wolgast had fractured the radius and not the ulna as reported. He also said the radius had been broken several days before Wolgast fought Welsh. When questioned by Dr. Ricker, Wolgast said he believed he had shattered the bone on Friday before the fight.

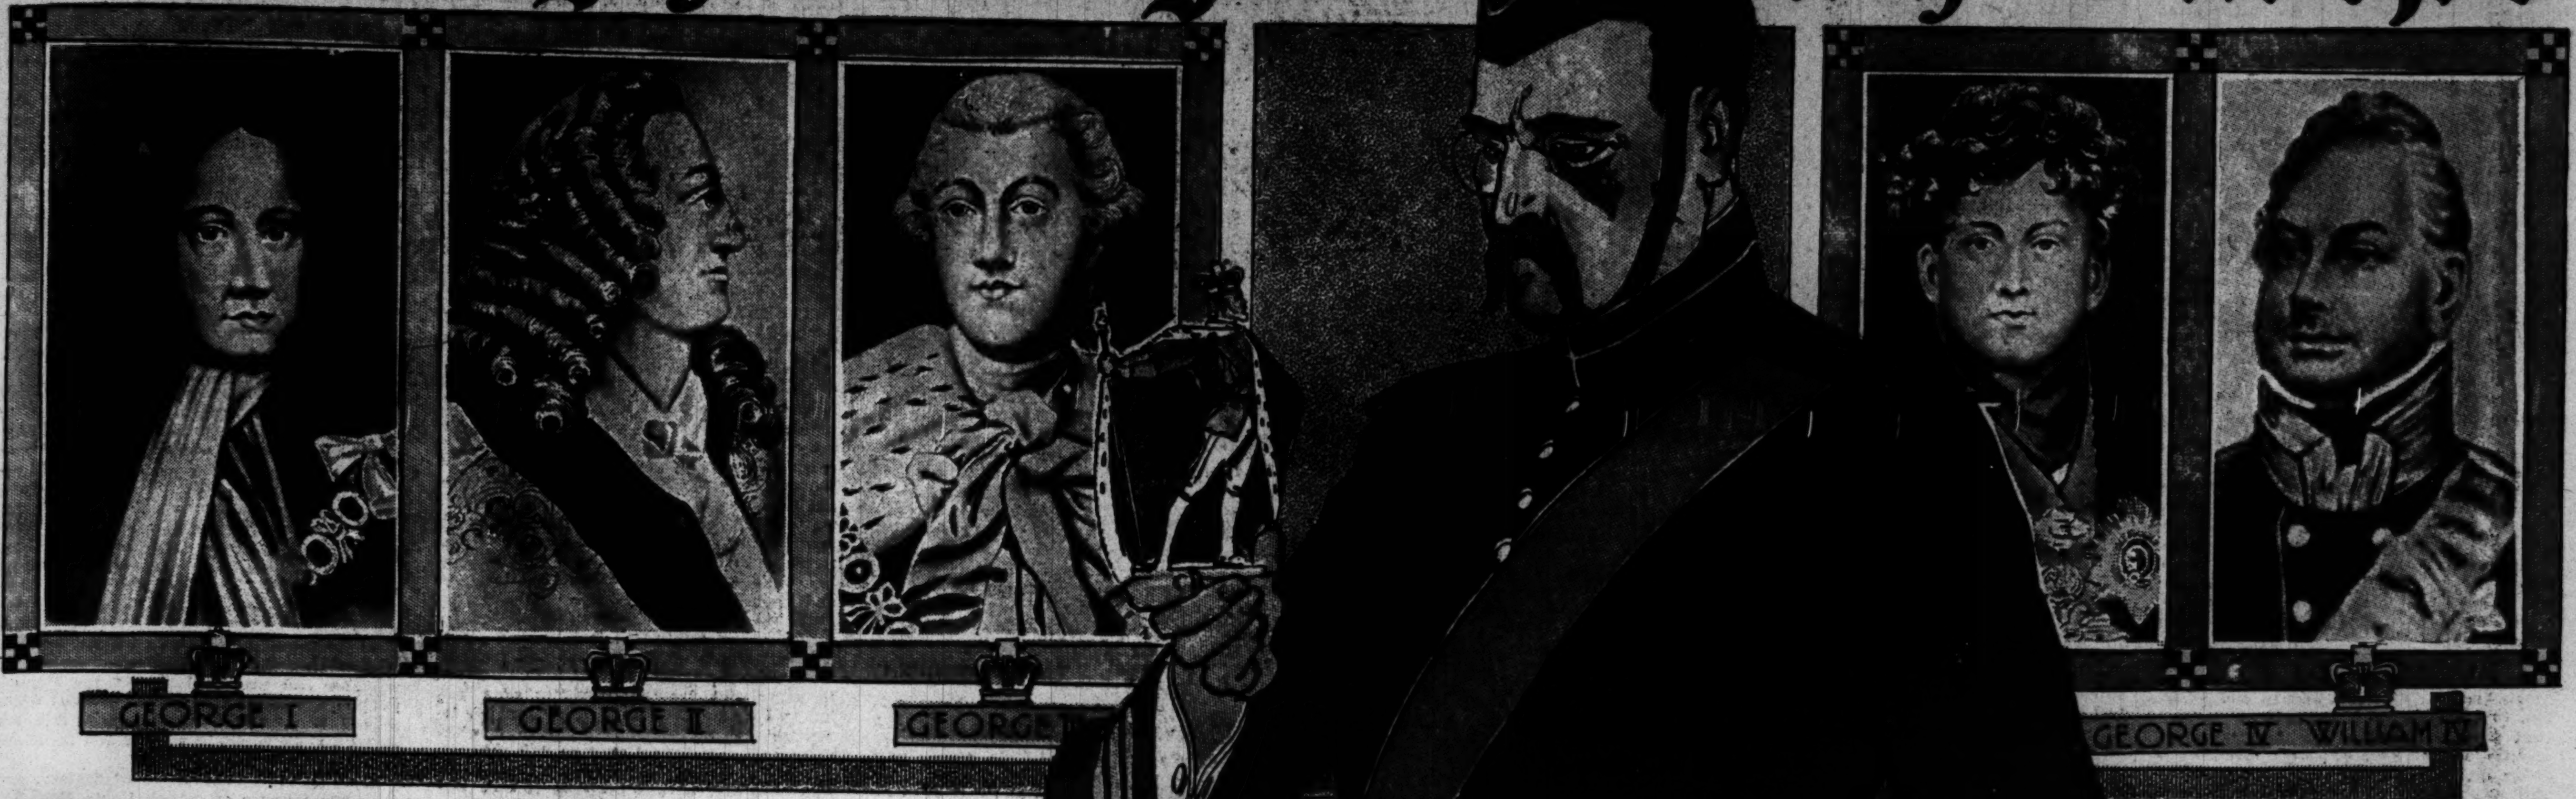
History of the Royal H ses of Europe



England's Hanoverian Rulers

This is the third chapter of an historical series by Herbert Caxton, dealing with the dynasties involved in the European war. These articles tell the story of the hidden side of kingly houses. They reveal how "divine right" has placed upon thrones men and women with bloodstained hands, in whom insanity was frequent, who made a mockery of marriage and whose lives were miserable examples of the tragedies of kingship. They also show the struggle of the people for liberal government and for freedom. Next week the history of the House of Hapsburg will be given.

By HERBERT CAXTON.

[Copyright: 1914: By Herbert Caxton.]

THE decision by which the house of Hanover was called to the throne of England was that of William III., who decreed the act of settlement, which parliament promptly passed without a dissenting voice. It was actuated by religious hate, for it was determined that no Catholic should ever again rule Great Britain. This act cut off the son of James I. from his inheritance and vested the succession in his niece, the daughter of his sister, Elizabeth. This niece was Sophia Dorothea, who married the elector of Hanover and whose son, George Louis, became in time George I. of Great Britain and Ireland.

On his mother's side he had a thin trickle of Stuart blood, but on his father's he was stanchly German, stolidly German in parentage, temperament, looks, and mind. The house of Hanover sprang from Duke William of Celle or Zell, who was in his day a fussy German potentate, one of several hundred like him reigning in fussy German duchies in the seventeenth century. Like his forbears and his successors he was a stolid squire. He managed his duchy as he managed his family, attending to all his duties, even to winding up the clock and putting the cat out o' nights.

It is said that when he died his seven sons flipped a coin to see who should get married. In such ways was the destiny of duchies settled and the methods in modern monarchies now are not greatly different. A son George won the toss. George had a keen eye to business, as all the Guelphs had, and as soldiering was his business he sold his sword to the highest bidder. Now he was fighting for Austria, now against her in the same campaign. Sometimes he fought under a Catholic, then under a Protestant banner. He even became a Swedish general, and was rewarded with the abbey of Hildesheim. He died there in 1641, being survived by a quartet of sons.

The succession went on down. The dukes, or electors as they came to be called, continued to serve with their men now under one warring monarch, now under another. As time went on things changed in the sleepy old court at Zell, for the dukes came home from their foreign wars, bringing with them frail damsels who sang other music than that of Luther's hymn. Thousands of Hanoverian soldiers were sold to this or that king and were sent away to fight for they knew not what, just as they do in Europe today, and just as the Hessians did who fell on our own soil trying to crush colonial independence.

Rulers Arrogant and Ignorant.

The Hanoverian rulers were strong absolutists, as the English were destined to learn. Arrogant, ignorant, and cold they believed as firmly in their divine right to rule as did Catherine of Russia or Louis XIV. They exacted implicit obedience in every particular. They took the last pfennig from the wretched peasants in taxes, and then the whole court went hunting through the grain the serf had raised out of the reluctant soil. These subjects lived in abject poverty in order to keep in luxury their hereditary rulers at the tinsel court tricked out in imitation of Versailles.

Ernest Augustus, the elector, who was father to the First George of Great Britain, rented out his soldiers wherever he could make a profit. If the king could pay his price he didn't care whether he was Protestant or Catholic or what his cause was. Once he rented 6,700 Hanoverians to Venice. Only 1,400 came back. George Louis, who was born in 1660, was a dutiful son. He took his army to fight for the emperor against the Turks. He saw service at the siege of Vienna, in Italy, and on the Rhine.

George married his cousin, Sophia Dorothea of Zell, a young, beautiful, witty, and willful girl. He is described as being "odiously hard, cold, and silent." The marriage was not a happy one. Royal marriages seldom are. This one was contracted for power and money. Love did not enter into it. Life at the Hanover court was dull, vulgar, and immoral. Ernest Augustus had a mistress, the Countess Platen, an ugly, painted old hag. The Prince Electress Sophia Dorothea let her tongue run too fast. She made bitter fun of her husband and the countess and made enemies of them. Then, too, she took a lover, a brilliant worthless Swede, Count Philip von Königsmarck, who also enjoyed the favors of the countess. Drunk, he boasted of his double conquest, and this being brought to the countess' ears she set four bullies upon him, and he fell pierced by their blades. As he lay dying she came out and stamped her heel upon his mouth.

Wife a Prisoner for Life.

The court at Hanover shrouded this tragedy in mystery, and the truth did not become public property until many years after. George is usually acquitted of complicity or knowledge of this murder, but no less a historian than Lord Acton said on this point that the future king's destination should have been Tyburn instead of St. James. C. Grant Robertson says: "The shame of this sordid scandal was to repeat itself with wearisome iteration in the quarrels of fathers and sons, of mothers with their children in the domestic chronicle of the electoral and royal dynasty."

George took his erring wife and put her in a prison castle, where she stayed until she died thirty-two years after. He never saw her again nor ever spoke her name.

It must not be supposed that this "odiously hard, cold and silent" man was an-improvement on his wife morally. This man, who was the hereditary bishop of Osnaberg, had at this time two mistresses, ridiculous scarecrows, ugly and greedy, whom he afterward took with him to England to batten on the people there.

This vindictive treatment of his wife alienated his son from George, and led this son, who was the second George, violently to oppose the father when the latter was king.

It was twenty years after he put his wife away, during sixteen years of which he had been elector of Hanover, that death in England struck Queen Anne and called George to the throne of Great Britain. Like the little Holstein princes who were called to reign over Britain, his horizon was entirely bounded by his own little duchy, which he considered the most beautiful land in the world and the equal in importance of any. "He thought the cackle of his burg the distant murmur of the world." He had no conception of the British empire. He despised it and its people. He could speak few words of its tongue, and he never learned much more all his life. He preferred to live in Hanover, and he did so as much as he could, deserting his great realm many times to go back to his dear Hanoverian court.

Hanoverians Loot British Treasury.

He was notified of his succession to the throne, but it was not until some time after that he leisurely made his way to London accompanied by his favorites and a horde of expectant courtiers. The English in all loyalty awaited the German sovereign who had been the heir of their Dutch king's wish. What must have been the feelings of the people who had had as monarchs an Elizabeth, a James, and a Charles, who had become accustomed to sovereigns with courts boasting chivalry, beauty, and learning, to see descending upon them this vacant faced king, with his tatterdemalion entourage, avaricious courtiers, blackamoor attendants, and the two old mistresses as ugly as their names, Schulenberg and Killwansegge.

It was clear that the new king considered Great Britain merely an annex to Hanover and that he intended to do as little governing in the kingdom as possible. He looked upon it, however, as his plunder, and he turned loose upon the treasury his band of retainers, who helped themselves to office and money. Contemporary history has many references to the behavior of these greedy Hanoverians, who excited amusement and disgust among the English.

The king created one of his mistresses Duchess of Kendal and the other Countess of Darlington. These two harpies intrigued in court and in politics to advance their own interests and to augment their stealings. A historian says: "The Schulenberg, by her insatiable appetite for intrigue and plunder, played a backstairs part with a zeal which prompted Walpole to say that 'she would at any time have sold her influence with the king for a shilling advance to the best bidder.'" The same writer describes the king in these words: "He was a brusque, heartless, cruel, avaricious, mean, sensual, punctilious, and masterful man. His abilities were mediocre; his manners not without a certain stiff dignity, but wholly unattractive."

It is not necessary to recite the political history of Great Britain during the reign of George I.; how some of the brightest names in its history were sullied by sordid intrigue while their owners stooped to fawn upon this German king and his favorites. The sovereign absented himself in Hanover whenever he could, delighting in these frequent visits to his beloved court, and always returning to London with regret. On one of these visits, however, he was stricken with apoplexy and died there. Robertson says: "It cannot be said that the king was sincerely regretted by any one in Great Britain, even by the Duchess of Kendal, to whose appetite for plunder his death would administer a quietus."

King's Son Joins Opposition.

George II., his son, born 1683, had hated his father heartily ever since the unfortunate mother had been put away to die in her castle prison. In England this hatred led him into the camp of the opposition, who welcomed him for his position and influence. Around his court ranged the social and political opponents of the king, and his palace became a breeding place of intrigue, not to say treason. He is described at this time as a "dry, irascible, punctiliously punctual man, with the passion for routine of a military martinet."

He could not be bullied, but he could easily be led by any one of great tact. One of those who influenced him was his wife, Caroline of Anspach-Brandenburg, who "was destined by her intellectual gifts, her political insight, and her broad minded friendships to be the most remarkable woman in the history of the two reigns."

The new Prince of Wales, Frederick Louis, born 1707 and created prince in 1729, followed in his father's footsteps by quarreling violently with his parents. He was a fop and a libertine, wrote caricatures of the king, and continually sided with the latter's enemies. It is related of him that when the pretender's army had reached Derby the prince was playing blindman's bluff with his pages. In 1736 he married Augusta of Saxe-Gotha. By this time he was really the leader to the opposition, and the feud between him and the king was bitter.

When his son, afterwards George III., was about to be born he shoved his wife into a coach and dumped her unceremoniously in the empty palace of St. James. This angered the king so that he ordered the prince to leave the court, deprived him of guards, and forbade the court and foreign ministers to have any intercourse with him. This did not prevent the prince and his wife from assailing the king bitterly on all occasions. It was amid such surroundings that the future king was brought up. The Prince of Wales died in 1751. The king, who had been under the influence of Lady Yarmouth for some years, followed his son to the grave nine years later.

George III., the first English born Hanoverian king, first saw the light in 1738. He had no particular love for Hanover, and the wits said he was unable to find it on the map. His private life was decorous, but marked by obstinacy and bigoted Protestantism.

Robertson says: "The fuller air, the larger light which the great characters, great principles, the formative forces of a new life in a people must find or be stifled were rigorously shut out from the earth on which the king worked and the heaven for which he hoped for himself and his subjects," and again: "Sympathy, the first condition of statesmanship, he lacked as completely as he lacked charity. In the mediocre mind of a subservient political hack—a Bute, a North, a Sackville, a Thurlow, or an Addington—he was happy to discover his most congenial ally and instrument."

His education and the atmosphere of unfilial treason in which he had spent his youth did not tend to improve a character at once stubborn, resentful, and parsimonious. He was ignorant both of men and public business, obstinate, vindictive, and resentful of all opposition. Green says: "During the first ten years of his reign he managed to reduce government to a shadow, and to turn the loyalty of his subjects into disaffection. Before twenty years were over he had forced the American colonies into revolt and independence, and brought England to what seemed then the brink of ruin. . . . He had a smaller mind than any English king before him save James II. He was wretchedly educated, and his natural powers were of the meanest sort. Nor had he the capacity for using minds greater than his own. . . . His only feeling towards great men was one of jealousy and hate. . . . His only purpose was to rule."

It was his fate, however, while trying to convert the aristocratic monarchy of which he was the head into absolutism, to be unwittingly the means of changing it into a democratic republic. As a prince he had allied himself with the Whigs, and as king he still called himself a Whig, but at the same time he began boldly to revive absolutism in its most detested form. His mouthpiece in the ministry was Bute.

People Battle for Reform.

The public now realized from the temper and acts of the king that they had as ruler an absolutist of the true continental type. Their feelings broke forth in opposition and marshaled themselves behind John Wilkes, whom they acclaimed as a savior. Demagogue as he was he knew the people's needs, and his words found a way straight to their hearts. He led the fight for parliamentary reform, battling step by step against the autocracy of king and commons.

He succeeded in making parliamentary debates open, and it was his efforts which gave to the press the right to discuss public questions freely. The king bitterly opposed both these things, and he looked on the demands of the people for fair representation as a personal attack upon him and his rights. He threw all his power and obstinate force to quell the rising tide of the people's cause. Popular indignation forced Bute's resignation and the king turned to Pitt for help.

Pitt proposed a return to constitutional government and a reconstruction of the ministry which was responsible for success during the Seven Years' war. The king said that he would sooner die than grant the return of constitutional government. He found a willing tool in Grenville, a man as narrow as himself. Grenville, at the king's request, arrested forty-nine persons because of a censure of the king's speech, which was made by Wilkes in his newspaper. Wilkes was confined in the tower, but so flagrantly illegal was the issuing of the warrants that he was released by the court, only to be prosecuted for libel. The king pushed on the prosecution, and his influence resulted in both lords and commons denouncing the people's champion and in the commons expelling him from membership.

It is hardly necessary to repeat except in bare outline the attitude of George III. toward the American colonies. He had asserted his right to tax them and had refused assent to their legislative acts denying that right. He would not listen to their plea for representation, a plea which he considered a treasonable demand. Pitt's advocacy of the colonists' resistance to the stamp act caused the king to call him "the trumpet of sedition" and to wish for his death.

King's Tyrrany Loses America.

Wilkes returned to the country and was elected to parliament for Middlesex. A trial was had and he was thrown out, only to be reëlected. The king urged on the prosecution and Wilkes was again expelled, only to be elected a third time, when once more the house at the king's bidding threw him out. This time the whole country rose against the king and his supporters for the violations of constitutional law. Wilkes was then elected an alderman of London. A petition went up which boldly asserted that the house of commons had ceased to be representative.

Another evidence of the king's tyranny was seen in the prosecution of printers who had published reports of parliamentary debates. The arrest of these men and of the lord mayor who released them caused such public demonstrations of dislike for the king and his government that proceedings were dropped, paving the way for the London press as it now exists.

He looked with approval on the outrages of British and German troops and the far more horrible outrages of Indian savages. Lecky says: "He strongly supported the employment of Indians, and in October, 1777, he expressed the hope that Howe would turn his thoughts to the mode of war best calculated to end this contest as most distressing to the Americans."

The surrender of Yorktown saw England brought almost to ruin by the obstinacy of its monarch. Revolt broke out nearer home. Ireland had been administered for generations as a vassal state. It had a parliament which had no power but to promulgate acts handed to it by one in London. Catholic, five to one, its predominating religion was suppressed politically. No Catholic could sit in parliament or on the bench, hold municipal office, military rank, or practice at the bar. Nearly all the land had been conficated for the use of the Protestants. Parliamentary votes were denied Catholics and it was only lately that they had been allowed religious freedom. Irish commerce and agriculture had been deliberately ruined. Poverty was apparent everywhere.

Religious rancor resulted in the murderous rebellion of 1798 and left the country in the most pitiable state. In 1800 Pitt brought about the union and proposed measures of the most enlightened kind. They comprised the emancipation of the Catholics and the removal of their disabilities. When the king heard the details he was furiously angry and exclaimed to Lord Dundas: "I count any man my personal enemy who proposes any such measure." No arguments of his ministers could move him. He would stand by the oath he took when crowned and insist on the sacramental tests. The result was Pitt's resignation. The king was delighted with the successor, Mr. Addington, a man as narrow minded as himself.

Other momentous events occurred during this reign of George III. besides the rebellion of the American colonies. This, however, involving as it did such a depletion of the British empire, caused great feeling against the king. The people of England felt that there was much justice in the cause of the colonists, for taxation without representation was what was keeping them, the English, in a state bordering serefdom. They fondly boasted that "Englishmen would never be slaves," but there was not much difference between slavery and the conditions to which the Hanoverian monarch chosen by a Dutch one had reduced them.

Parliament, which was supposed to represent the popular will, did nothing of the sort. It consisted of a hereditary house of lords and house of commons elected usually in the most corrupt manner. Votes were openly bought and sold, and as the party of privilege had the most money, it firmly entrenched itself, defying all attempts at reform. The king would have only subservient ministers. Unless they agreed to his obstinate demands out they went.

Besides being taxed to the last penny to support the government, the people were oppressed by their landlords. Repressive laws burdened them; liberty of speech scarcely existed, and the courts, corrupt like other branches of the government, dealt out justice largely in favor of the wealthy. Young men by the tens of thousands were kidnaped into the army and navy and made to go abroad to fight the king's wars, in which the English had little or no interest. They were half hearted in trying to put down the American revolution, and it was not until they went out to fight the tyrant Napoleon that they showed much enthusiasm.

Ruler Victim of Insanity.

George III. came of a family which was always selling its sword and its soldiers wherever it could do so with profit. He considered "my army" his personal property, to deal with as he saw fit. So low was nationalism sunk in England that but few voices were raised against this policy. So, too, he bought the services of Hessians from Frederick with which to put down the American "rebels." It was necessary in this case, for the English had little stomach to shoot down their transatlantic brothers.

At the close of the American revolution it was noticed that the king's mind was failing. Long ages of rulers with hereditary taints, the inbreeding of royal families, the immorality, the excesses of his ancestors broke forth in insanity, sometimes taking violent phases. It became impossible for his ministers to consult with him. For days he raged like a madman, threatening with death all who came near him. Again, he would weep bitterly for hours or sink into deep fits of depression. He imagined his people were in revolt. He thought he saw the ghosts of his father and grandfather. He believed that his sons were conspiring to depose him, which was not far from the truth. Some days he imagined he was leading the Hanoverian troops against the Turk and with his sword he rushed about the palace shouting at the top of his voice.

As it became more and more apparent that the old king was helplessly incapacitated for governing the land the question of a regency was discussed. The country was confronted with an imbecile king and a Prince of Wales whom every one knew was scarcely better fitted to reign than his father. Young George had inherited the throne and all the insanity and unbalanced character of his forbears. He was yet in his teens when he had a reputaton for dissipation and profligacy equal to that of the most abandoned reue of the realm. He had allied himself with the opposition to the king and had openly flouted his father and his policies. He consorted with rakes, bawds, and pugilists. His chief crony and supporter was Charles Fox, the brilliant and dissolute Whig leader, a gambler and a shameless man, who descended to depths of infamy which would have made Rochester, his prototype of Charles' day, seem modest by comparison.

The prince gambled recklessly and was steeped in debt. At one time he owed $3,000,000. His amours were disgraceful and he had no more sense of honor in the alcove than at the gaming table. Titled women threw themselves at his head. At one time his creditors levied on his palace and were actually in possession of his effects. He contracted a marriage with a Mrs. Fitzherbert, an act which endangered his right of succession.

Greatest Profligate Since Charles II.

In spite of all these things, which were known, so profound was the belief in the divine right of kings and so great the subserviency of parliament that it voted 161,000 pounds to pay the prince's debts, and the king, who had not spoken to him for months or allowed him to enter the palace, gave him an additional 10,000 a year. This was done on Fox's motion, he having been assured by the prince that he had no idea of marrying Mrs. Fitzherbert. The prince had the effrontery to go back upon Fox, to admit and subsequently to deny the marriage when it was all the time a matter of record. Then he did what might have been expected of him. He deserted the woman.

This was the state of affairs when the king's condition brought up the question of regency, and this was the man whom the Hanoverian succession presented to the English people as their ruler. History at this time reveals disgraceful facts concerning the chicane of English politics, conspiracies, deals, and trades involving even the greatest jurists, and which remind one of ward politics at its lowest. The regency was at last an accomplished fact, and the way was paved for putting on the throne the greatest profligate it had seen since the second Charles.

This new George had nothing to recommend him for the kingship. He was neither soldier nor statesman. He made a pretense of patronizing men of letters, but he never read a book, and the only men of letters who came at his call were fawning sycophants of the second and third class. Neither political party could trust him. His word was as good as his bond, he said. But his bond was worthless. He was the tool of scheming men who had anything but the nation's good at heart. He and his brother of York indulged in scandalous conduct, the elder taking a party of drunken companions into the king's chamber to let them hear the insane ravings of his father. Walters of the London Times was imprisoned for sixteen months for printing a version of this disgraceful fact, which was even glossed over in the account.

Tries to Divorce Caroline.

The first act of Georve IV. was characteristic of the man. He called for a divorce from his queen, Caroline of Brunswick. His cabinet refusing to sanction the bill, it was taken to parliament. This man, whose private life was a public scandal, brought charges of misconduct against his wife of the most horrible kind, dragging her reputation, which was indeed of the frailest, into the gaze of the world. It is significant that the greatest legal lights of the kingdom offered their services to the king to vindicate his "honor." Brougham defended Caroline and the scandal became so odorous that finally the suit was quashed, George having backed down when his advisers showed him what a disgraceful thing he was doing.

It is related that the prince was drunk the first night of their marriage. He neglected his wife from the first. Queen Charlotte, his mother, did not like her, and her treatment of the princess was cold and neglectful. She forced on her as lady in waiting Lady Jersey, the prince's mistress. Caroline had a poor education and had been brought up in a vicious court, but, whatever her later faults, and they were enough, she tried to be a good wife to the prince. Their only child, Charlotte, was taken from her by the queen and prince, and mother and daughter really had little life together. Charlotte married Leopold of Saxe-Coburg, who after became the first king of the Belgians, but she died without children who lived.

For ten years the English tolerated this man as their king, besides the long period of his regency. Momentous events took place in Europe, Great Britain having her share in them, but not even in the slightest degree did George IV. influence them. During a part of that time Great Britain was fortunate to have statesmen of ability and warriors of might, but this was not due in any part to the monarch's selection. His favorite minister was Viscount Castlereagh, afterward Lord Londonderry, a scheming trickster, loyal to no party, not even to his own country, who was mistrusted at home and despised abroad and who died by his own hand, mourned by none.

All the sons of old George led lives as licentious as that of the new king. The Duke of York had for a mistress the avaricious Mary Clarke, who sold her influence to men wishing army commissions on a regular scale of bribery. She brought upon the duke the pension fund scandal which caused him to resign as commander in chief. His brother, the Duke of Clarence, made Mrs. Jordan, the actress, support him out of the money he gave her. When he became king he ennobled the ten children he had by her, but in the meanwhile he had cast her off to die in poverty.

The Duke of Kent, the father of Queen Victoria, lived ten years with Mme. St. Laurent and had several children by her. Even old Queen Charlotte is said to have made $2,000,000 on the stock exchange by reason of her secret information. She made $350,000 by selling East India cadetships.

In 1830 George died, but the country experienced no improvements by the change, for his brother William, Duke of Clarence, ascended the throne as William IV.

This man, the younger brother of George, had been his pupil in the school of profligacy. He had no children. He "was thoroughly mediocre and lacked the education necessary to fit him for his position. He was utterly without dignity and manifested such eccentricity and morbid irritability that, as Grenville bluntly records, many believed him to be 'cracked.' His tactlessness was remarkable, and his habit of delivering impromptu speeches on every opportunity, filled with tirades against the French or the Duchess of Kent or some other foe, made him a general laughing stock."

The character of William IV. is what might have been expected from the brother of the regent, who accompanied him in all his riotous life, who in the house of lords defended his brother's extravagance, and who took his part in the infamous divorce. He was called the "sailor king," but he saw little service, and his defiance of rules caused his resignation as high admiral. He opposed the liberation of the slaves. As king he was an obstinate monarch, always fighting parliament, a stickler for the prerogative, and an opponent of liberal measures.

Such a king as William did, of course, nothing to advance parliamentary reform or the cause of popular government. During his reign of seven years the few champions of the people wrestled long and hard in lords and commons, being fought every step of the way by the crown and the powers of privilege. This had been the case during the terms of all four Georges, and that of William was not different. Firmly intrenched and backed by royal approval, the feudal lords and their party offered an almost insuperable obstacle to parliamentary reform. Political corruption was widespread, and rotten boroughs abounded everywhere. Men sat in parliament for constituencies of a few hundred conservatives and sometimes for localities with no inhabitants whatever, while great bodies of liberal electors had only one representative and sometimes none at all. The condition of the laboring classes was miserable. Wages were most meager; the hours frightfully long. Women and girls toiled in mines harnessed to carts of coal which they dragged on all fours. Children of tender age were employed at dangerous machinery in mills twelve and fourteen hours a day. Vast tracts of agricultural land were held waste that the rich might hunt the fox; even then corn and other foodstuffs imported from America bore a heavy import tax.

While a few liberal peers and men of position spoke boldly against these conditions, others less influential who dared to speak or write were thrown into prison or made to suffer indignity on the pillory. William Cobbett and his associates were thus arrested. They continued to battle, however, with such popular support that by 1835-'37 the movement had grown to such proportions that even the hardest headed Tory saw that some concession would have to be made.

The Advent of Victoria.

It is the fashion of English historians to speak as though the Hanoverian reign of Great Britain closed with that of George III. Nothing could be further from the truth. The reigns of George IV. and William IV. were as truly Hanoverian as that of George II., and that of Victoria in most essentials may be classed with the others. As the granddaughter of George III. she had inherited all the Hanoverian traditions brought over by the elector. Her education and training conformed to all those traditions, and her attitude toward many important questions which arose during her long reign was precisely that which the Georges would have assumed, making allowance for the more enlightened outlook of the nineteenth century.

It is true that on her coming to the throne the connection between Great Britain and Hanover ceased automatically to exist, because the Salic law obtained in the duchy. But that is a mere detail.

She was a simple minded, true woman who had been reared in a narrow domestic atmosphere on all the Georgian traditions. "I do not think," says Lecky, "that in any sphere of life the queen would have been regarded as a woman of striking wit, or originality, or even commanding power." She had great good sense, some tact, and an untiring industry. There is no doubt that she had her people's interest deep in heart, wrong as she was on many public questions, particularly foreign affairs.

She remained, however, German in thought to the end of her days. In this she was encouraged by Baron Stockmar, who advised her and her husband, the prince consort. This was Albert of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha. It was always said to have been a love match. Certainly they were devoted to each other, and the queen never ceased to mourn his death. The English were greatly disappointed in him because he was a German, but what could they expect? There was no other suitable Protestant match for the queen.

Meddles in Empire's Affairs.

No sooner was he installed as prince consort than he began meddling in internal and foreign affairs. Thoroughly imbued with the German drillmaster ideas and with the conception of absolute monarchy, he had no trouble in becoming the close adviser of the queen. She welcomed his advice because it coincided with her own and was the opposite of what her ministers would give. He was the thorn in the side of Palmerston and Lord John Russell and the former had often to "stet" back matter which Albert had deleted from state papers.

This was particularly true during the struggle for Italian independence. Neither the queen nor the prince had any conception of the cause for which Victor Immanuel, Cavour, or the Italian people were fighting. Her sympathies and his were entirely with Austria as representing absolutism and against the extension of popular liberty. William Roscoe Thayer, writing of this period, says:

"The British court had been almost unanimously pro-Austrian since the days of the coalition against the great Napoleon; the British sovereigns for more than a century had been anti-liberal, and neither Queen Victoria nor her political mentor, Prince Albert, was at this time an exception to the rule.

"Prince Albert's determined efforts to aggrandize the powers of the crown, ably conceived and pushed with German doggedness, were bearing fruit. . . . A queen whose every thought and act were either suggested, modified, or controlled by her consort could and did succeed. 'What has not my beloved and perfect Albert done?' she wrote. 'Raised monarchy to the highest pinnacle of respect and rendered it popular beyond what it ever was in this country!'

"Prince Albert had a truly Teutonic notion of royal prerogative. He had also much of the drillmaster quality to which Germany has owed her preëminence in militarism and education. Through him German ideas prevailed at court.

"Victoria, who was looked upon as the most typically English sovereign since Queen Anne, used the German language in the household and kept up a correspondence in German with 'Dearest Uncle Leopold,' to whom she imparted without reserve the affairs of the British government and from whom she received advice; and at the same time Prince Albert was disclosing state secrets to his old German master, Stockwar. Had any member of the British cabinet been suspected of such subserviency to foreign suggestion he would not have held office for a day."

Invariably Supported Absolutism.

In these circumstances it is little wonder that Palmerston on more than one occasion had communication with foreign powers without the queen's knowledge. When she discovered this, as she several times did, she quarreled with her minister and let the public know it. What the public did not know, however, was that she and the prince consort were constantly sending to King Leopold and to Baron Stockmar reports of British political action and unfavorable criticism of the British ministers. These secrets promptly were communicated to Berlin and Vienna, so that the diplomats of those capitals knew London's moves before they were made. The queen thought Cavour a political trickster, and the prince regarded him as a third rate politician.

The influence of the prince, who insisted on being present whenever a minister wished to communicate with the queen and who strongly held that she and not her minister should direct all foreign affairs when the constitution rested these things solely on the ministry, resulted in great friction.

Both the queen and prince consort were strongly opposed to all the continental movements for constitutions and personal liberty. They invariably supported absolutism. They were with Austria to the last ditch. She supported Bismarck when he took Schleswig-Holstein from Denmark, although both in this matter and that of Italian unity her ministry and the sentiment of the English public were against her. She disliked Gladstone heartily and disapproved most strongly of all his measures, home rule and franchise extension particularly.

She was most susceptible of flattery, and the easy manner in which Louis Napoleon overcame her repugnance to him by asking her advice about wet nurses and the proper food for infants, on the occasion of his visit to England after he became emperor, excited great amusement in other courts, where no one was deceived for a moment about the spurious character of the man.

The death of the prince consort was a stunning blow to her, and she mourned him continually. During all her widowhood she withdrew from society almost entirely. She never appeared in a London theater and was seldom seen in the capital. Her favorite home was Balmoral, in Scotland, where she secluded herself with a few friends and her faithful gilly, John Brown, who had great influence over her.

Prosperity in Victorian Reign.

Her strong imperialist sentiment made Beaconsfield her favorite minister, and the crowning glory of his life, her assumption of the Indian title, confirmed her opinion of him. Her long reign saw Great Britain advance immeasurably in prosperity. It was not unmarked by wars in dependencies, but even the results of these appear to have benefited the losers. She faithfully bore out all the traditions of the Georges as to the prerogatives of the crown, and she tried according to her rather narrow ways to make her people feel happy and contented. She gave the tone in the peculiar fashions of dress and household furnishings, the colorless popular literature which have come to be known as Victorian. She strictly conformed. No one who did not do so gained her approval. Her sense of humor was nil and her "We are not amused!" threw a chill over many a state dinner party.

But the English had great cause to admire and even idolize her. She was indeed the "good queen," as they called her. Her private life was above reproach and a shining contrast to that of most of her predecessors. Her death in 1901 was a cause of mourning all over the globe. She was undoubtedly one of the best sovereigns who ever reigned.

The advent of her son, crowned as Edward VII., saw a return of many things which had been taboo in his mother's long reign. Most of these were of minor social importance. He is credited with bringing about the rapprochement of Great Britain, France, and Russia, commonly known as the triple entente. Otherwise the kingdom went on much as it did before he came. He was credited with some statesmanship, but he did not live long enough to prove his abilities as a progressive monarch.

His son, the present king, has at least shown a disposition to get along fairly well with a liberal ministry. Not much was hoped from him, and the world has been agreeably surprised at what he has done.

Constitutional Great Britain has made great strides. In 1837 hardly the most gifted seer could have predicted the progress democracy has made. Measures have been adopted which neither party in William Fourth's day would have dared to foretell. The century old fight for Irish home rule has succeeded and the still older struggle to curb the power of the lords has been crowned with victory. Hide bound privilege has at last seen a great light and republican principles are now in the ascendant.

House Feels Royalty's Curse.

The curse of consanguinity which afflicts practically every royal house of Europe has been particularly severe on the Hanoverians. In days past there have been a number of deaths and birth which were veiled in mystery. While cancer cannot be called a consequence of inbreeding, it is remarkable that Edward VII., his brother, the Duke of Edinburgh, and his sister, the Empress Frederick, all died of that disease. It may be mentioned that cancer was the cause of Emperor Frederick's death also. The duke's son died of dissipation at an early age.

The present princess royal of Great Britain has never appeared in public since the death of her husband. The second daughter is an epileptic and has never married.

Prince Leopold died young of bleeding. His skin was so sensitive that he bled at the slightest scratch. Princess Alice of Hesse suffered from the same malady. The present German emperor, the grandson of Victoria, was born with his left hand withered. He has other troubles of a mental and physical sort which are abnormal.

Strange stories are told of the antics of the Duke of Edinburgh's three daughters. Two sons of Princess Christian were totally bald before they were 24. The daughter of Princess Henry of Battenberg, who is queen of Spain, has always had varicose veins and has to wear rubber stockings. Two of her children are deaf mutes. Her oldest brother is weak mentally and suffers from tuberculosis of the bones.

The divinity which doth hedge a king is still a fetish, but fewer people each year believe that divine choice had anything to do with the coming of the Hanoverians to England.

MRS. J. GORDON DOUGLAS

By MME. Y.

MRS. JAMES GORDON DOUGLAS has been officially proclaimed the best dressed woman in New York. If this is the case, she is—with perfect deference to all American metropolitan centers—the best dressed woman in this country. Some would say it meant that she is the best dressed woman in the world. Even Parisians—some of them—volunteer that American women as a whole dress better than any others.

Those who constituted the official board awarding Mrs. Douglas were the five dressmakers of Newport, who, of course, also have establishments in New York. That is to say, five dressmakers of New York (the smartest, most expensive five) have summer headquarters at the nation's social capital, and these are they who have pronounced the verdict, which is supplemented by the corroboration of others of the best dressed women of the smart set. Mrs. Stuyvesant Fish says that she thinks Mrs. Douglas deserves the honor; and Mrs. Vanderbilt says so, too. This, of course, is the Mrs. Vanderbilt who is the mother of the girl who was Miss Gladys Vanderbilt and is now the Countess Szechenyi. She was heralded as having the most beautiful trousseau ever borne away by an American bride, and as it was selected by her mother, Mrs. Vanderbilt ought to be regarded as a judge of authority.

But these people have had their say for seasons past, and important as it is, their judgment is pronounced from the standpoint of fashion. This year Izola Carpentier, maker of miniatures for the smart set, has pronounced Mrs. Douglas from the artistic standpoint to be the best dressed woman she has seen.

How many dresses has the best dressed woman in America? Some people with a passion for moderation have been printing things of late to the effect that the really best dressed people have only a few clothes, which they wear with taste and have made over from time to time. The best dressed woman in America seldom has less than fifty dresses. Although she knows mighty well how a young girl and a woman of scanty resources can dress acceptably on little, she does not practice such abstemiousness herself. What's the use? She is the daughter of Luther Kountze, the millionaire banker and a member of the most celebrated firm in Wall street. Her husband is the son of William P. Douglas, a man of wealth and social supremacy. She has lived in lavishness, and she does not economize on her wardrobe.

She is an artist and she gives just as much care to the shadings and combinations of materials in dresses as she gives to her water color drawing. As she observed once, "No painter, however amateurish, would dream of saying, 'O, well, I have this color already mixed on my palette, so I will just shove it in here, although in reality the situation calls for a different shade altogether.' Why, then, should a woman whose position in life makes it imperative for her to dress well carelessly substitute an evening coat that does not blend with the evening dress she is wearing?"

How Her Theory Works Out.

You have Mrs. Douglas' theory of dressing herein expressed. As it is worked out it results in a wardrobe for this beautiful young woman of fashion consisting of twelve evening dresses and eight evening wraps. She has a rose colored dress, a smoke colored dress, a black and white dress, and a white dress, with all of which she wears the same white wrap. And this, for Mrs. Douglas, represents economy. As for the rest, she has another rose colored dress—so I should call it, although she says it is deep pink, and not rose color at all—which she thinks does not look well with the white wrap. "There is something a little garish about it." And therefore one of the great French dressmakers turned his art on the task of creating something of deep pink—deeper pink, one might call this shade. It is darker than the one which the great lady called deep, and it is in velvet, while the costume is rich, heavy, soft silk. It is lined with cream color and heavily trimmed with great lengths of cream lace which matches the cream lace of the dress.

This, by the way, is the touch which unifies or identifies it with this one particular creation. Mrs. Douglas considers that this sets it aside for the one particular creation and makes it inappropriate for all the others. Perhaps if she had some dress with no lace on it, and of a color that made harmony with the deeper pink, she might occasionally use them together. But she has not, and the best dressed woman in America will make no such compromises with good taste and economy, or to wear it except in its proper place.

She has a black dress, and another black dress, and another one. The first black dress is in the grande dame manner, totally innocent of sleeves, cut in a long V front and back, and hanging loosely from somewhere above the waist line, in long, glistening, clinking, heavy mosaics of jet. It is without one touch of color except for a red rose that flames on her right hip. She wears something black and prickly standing high in her hair and enmeshed at its base in sparkling gems. This, indeed, is the costume for the display of diamonds. With it she usually wears thousands of dollars' worth, in the form of a corsage pin, big and gracefully curved, and a necklace from which droops a long pendant. The wrap for this is black. The other black dress is of soft velvet, lightened with duchesse lace, and the third is an airy black and white affair for dancing.

But to get on to the subject of the afternoon dresses and the almost evening ones. There are some fifteen of these. A black one, for instance, closely following the lines of the lower part of the figure and overhung with a lovely accordion plaited black lace tunic which floats when she walks. Very tantalizing is that effect, with its dim, rounded outline veiled in floating lace. It has satin sleeves to the elbow and black lace sleeves to the wrists. A black velvet coat and a black velvet hat of medium size and trimmed with one black feather completes this costume. There is an outfit of midnight blue, with coral belt, and with it Mrs. Douglas wears her quaintly carved coral set of ornaments and a blue toque enlivened with a coral flower.

Delights in Color Schemes.

But if anybody thinks that I am going to undertake to describe all of those fifteen afternoon dresses, they mistake the intent of this article. It was intended to deal rather with the philosophy of good dressing from the best dressed woman's standpoint. To mention the remainder of her wardrobe, she has never less than four tailored or three piece outfits, and she does not often keep one from a former season. Besides being the best dressed woman, she is a crack tennis player, and she therefore goes in for appropriate dressing for the courts. She sails a great deal at Newport, and motors. One of her favorite tennis outfits consists of a black and white checked skirt with a white waist and a black and white broad brimmed hat of the same material. When she finishes her game, except in the hottest weather, she slips into a loose jacket of black.

Besides these, she has, of course, sweaters and outing coats galore. As for her pale colored summer dresses of thin materials, there are myriads of them. She also has many motoring outfits, of which one in mauve color attracted more attention than any other. It was a dress in one piece apparently, and over it she wore a coat of double faced material, mauve on the outside and a paler lavender underneath. Color schemes are what the best dressed woman is strong on, and this one was the talk of Newport.

No one but an intimate or a member of the family could adequately describe her gems. They go in sets. There is one of pearls, said to be worth some hundreds of thousands of dollars; and a set of emeralds, and, of course, of diamonds. There are also stones without sparkle, but again in those wonderful color schemes in which the best dressed woman delights. The gems of Mrs. Douglas are valued at something over a quarter of a million dollars.

Dressing Well Economically.

The clothes of Mrs. Douglas represent approximately $40,000 a year. . . is difficult to say how the sum is divided. She selects a "pretty little evening frock, simple and nice for dancing," for perhaps $175. In the same afternoon she says carelessly, "You might send this out," as she walks up and down between the long triple mirrors, and the price of it, if she thinks to inquire, is $1,000. Afternoon dresses seldom go above $250 or $300, and tailored suits often over $350.

The interesting thing is to get her point of view on how economically one can dress well. She is said to have spent a good bit of time recently planning with a young friend of hers on how the girl could put up a fine appearance at a small cost. She thought that for $500 a year, since the girl cannot sew herself, she ought to be able to look as well as any of her young friends of the smart set. One evening dress is enough, according to the woman with a dozen, if you have berthas and lace scarfs with which to make it look different for different occasions. Of course, it must be of either black or white, in order to escape detection. Two, she considers, are riches—one of black and the other of white. On occasions the black one can appear with a white bertha and the white one draped in black.

She counted up that there are fourteen different appearances to be made with such capital. Among others, there is a tunic effect of black that looks well over the white ground, and a deep lace flounce of black for other occasions. Every girl, to look well, must, according to the authority, have a three piece suit and a hack costume, but it may be something carried over from the year before. That is all there is to it, in the opinion of the best dressed woman, since the three piece suit does for any occasion except such as call for one of the fourteen evening dresses provided for.

An evening dress for $100, a three piece suit for $150, and $250 then remains for such incidentals as we did not even think to mention in connection with Mrs. Douglas' wardrobe. Shoes? What of them? The great woman of fashion spends as much on hers as she says is necessary for the entire equipment of her not wealthy friend. Five hundred dollars—all of it and perhaps a little more—goes for shoes every year for Mrs. Douglas. When you consider that each of those evening dresses is matched, or contrasted, or otherwise provided with at least one pair of slippers and sometimes three, and that each of these is made to order from materials especially selected and trimmed in rhinestones, you can calculate sum totals yourself.

But quite apart from the usual, conventional articles of clothing as above mentioned, Mrs. Douglas goes in for fads which are not cheap. She has veils to follow whims of fashion, such as the chiffon covering for the lower part of the face, leaving the eyes free. She has fresh cut flowers when they reinforce her costume, and sometimes she sends back the first order as the florist has filled it, because she says the color does not harmonize with the scheme. She has jewels in fancy settings that have to be changed every now and then.

The lesson? The deductions to be drawn from the facts stated? Is it desirable to spend $30,000 a year for clothes, and does the accomplishment justify it? According to what this high priestess tells her young friend, the girl who is not so wealthy, the answer is "No." That is to say, the greater cleverness comes in making oneself look just as charming on the amount which some women spend for their shoes. You notice the keynote to the success of Mrs. Douglas with her clothes? It is pains and infinite care in the blending of color. If you possess the faculty of it, exercise this gift to the full. If you do not, or have not the money with which to carry it out, stick to black and white and the results cannot go far wrong. Such are the precepts of an artist at costuming. Lavish expenditures are mere trouble savers. She who does not have to economize is spared a great deal of anxiety, but otherwise has no advantage. Without a gift and the expenditure of a great deal of care, she cannot be the best dressed woman, no matter what her wealth.

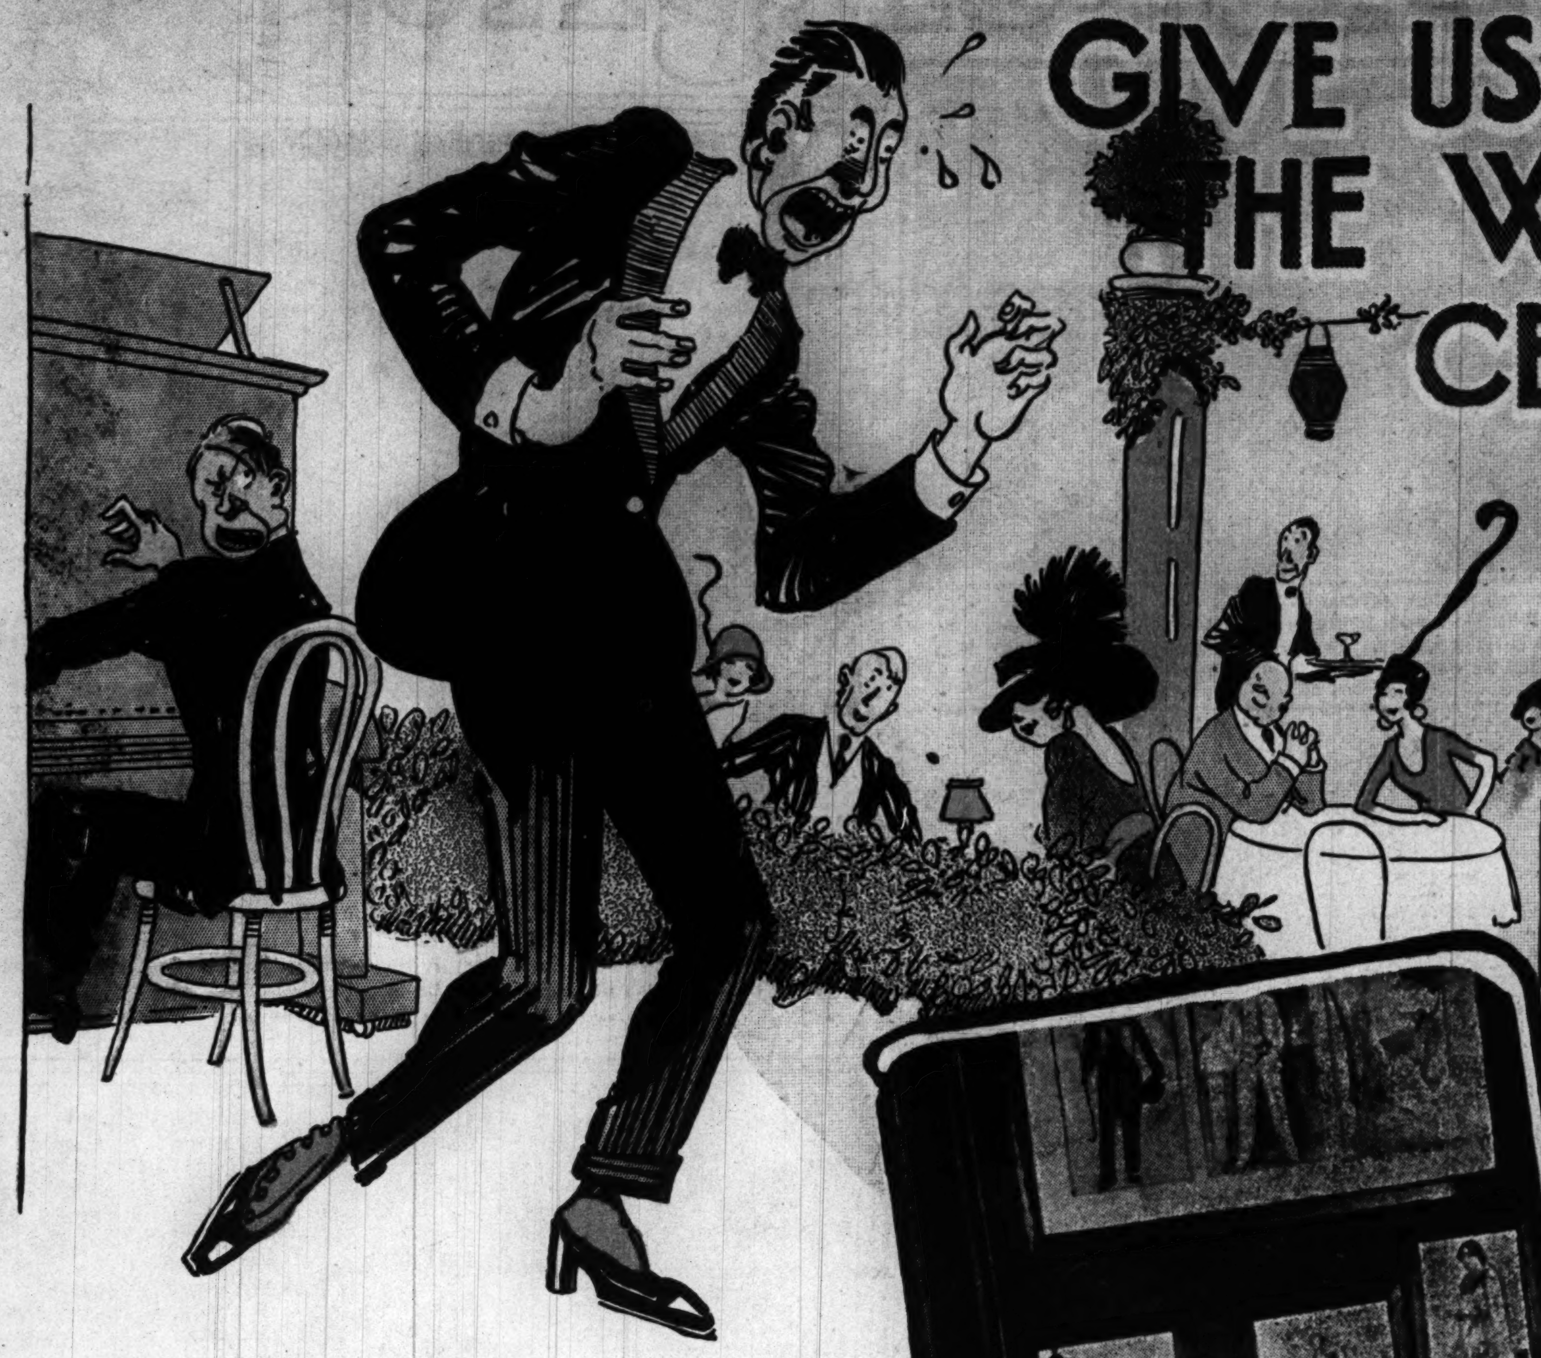
A DAY WITH THE PEOPLE WHO GIVE US OUR SONGS. THE WRITERS? CERTAINLY NOT—THE BOOSTERS.

by ONEY FRED SWEET



THE pounding of a piano—the pounding of ten pianos all at once, each on a different tune—attracted me as I neared the corner of State and Monroe. On a huge cloth banner with each red letter as big as one of the windows in the place was announced the title of that very latest song hit, "I Want to Be in Dear Louisiana." This may not have been exactly the title, but it is near enough. I had to crowd my way up the stairs past the loose, fuzzy, gray overcoats that were half turned up at the collars, the hats with their bows behind, canes, cloth top shoes, white rat buttons, and bleached hair. I felt certain that I was in the right place—the place to market my own song hit which I had dashed off the night before.

At the top of the stairs the pounding of the pianos became louder in my ears. In a booth where racks were crowded with the sheets of recently written melodies, two youths were jumping about without letting their work as salesmen interfere with their singing to an accompaniment played by another youth at a piano (strings and keys exposed) perched high on a platform. Every little while the player would turn around, and with his fingers still drumming on the keyboard, add to the harmony with his own barber shop tenor. For a time I passed up and down the alley way between the piano rooms—the alley way that was plastered with photographs of members of the profession, each photo heavily autographed. It was there that some one in charge found me.

"I've got a song I've written," I told him.

He didn't seem the least bit enthusiastic nor did he seem the least bit surprised. Without permitting me to interrupt him in carrying on a weird conversation with a group of persons similar to those I had passed on the stairs, he looked at me pityingly.

"I'm sure you'll find it a hit," I assured. "You can see that I have made 'eyes of blue' rhyme with 'Sue,' and that the girl lives south of the Mason and Dixon line. Say, are these people all song writers up along here?"

"No, they're all song boosters," he retorted, without caring to give my manuscript any further attention. "You'll have to excuse me now, for I want to be sure that 'Zampa and Zampa' get this new 'rag' of ours. My friend, songs aren't written; they're boosted."

Tricks of the Song Business.

Madhouse that it was, I had not stuck around half an hour before I had learned much about the popular song business; how every firm has three songs it is trying to force on the public—one leader, one old one, and one brand new one, the latter still in typewritten form and raved over by the branch manager. It is at these "Tin Pan alleys" and "Melody lanes" in New York and Chicago where it is decided what the fellow in Muscatine will be whistling on his way to work during the coming months, and what the girl in Mankato shall be playing on the piano for her Wednesday night caller. This little balcony place at the corner of Monroe and State is said to be visited by at least 800 "singing acts" a day. In fact, it is said, if you hang around there long enough you will see practically every singing act in the country.

"Can't you give me a 'Hug Up Close to Your Baby' song?" I heard one of the "Mack and Mason" team inquire. "I can't put this war dope over. We were a cleanup in Racine, but died like dogs in Peoria. My wife's dress hadn't come back from the laundry and she had to work in that old dress, and you know how tacky that is, but at that I want a 'sure fire.'"

And immediately Mr. Mack was rushed into a booth where a waiting pianist had already turned to pound out the plaintiff prelude of "Take Me Back, Back, Back to Carolina."

Finally the manager of the place did pause long enough to ask me if I'd written a "counter song" or a "novelty." In either case, however, he said it would be a "fliver." I found out later that a "counter song" was one that sold on its title, lettered across a background of pink moonlight on a purple sea. "When You Know You're Not Forgotten by the Girl Who Can't Forget" was cited as a good example. A "fliver" meant a failure.

It was all very interesting but very distracting, and I couldn't see where I was making any progress with my own beautiful ballad. I felt very much out of place. The "act catchers"—those persons who make the stage doors of theaters and drag the singers over to the boosting place to try new numbers—ignored me.

One of the act catchers did confess to me that he had a hard life.

"No use trying to talk to an actor," he explained, "if he hasn't just got through bowing to the applause. You can't keep a dog alive unless you feed him, and an actor can't live without hand clapping. Lack of applause makes 'em positively sick. How can I tell an actor? Why, by the 'I am' way they have about 'em. There ain't one of 'em but who could be a topliner if he had the chance. You've written a song, too? Well, send it down to New York and they'll send it back to you. You've got as much chance selling it as a girl who dishes prunes in a cafeteria has of getting a tip."

Get Ballads by the Ton.

It was while I was back by the counter where the guardians of the "professional copies" were busy questioning the seekers after free music, to get a line on their standing in the game before coming across with the melodies, that a gentleman strolled in, and because all the "gitney" actors (singers in moving picture houses) began to patronize him I innocently inquired who he might be. I think it was one of "The Two Dots" who glanced up aghast, but gave me the desired information:

"Why, ain't you ever heard of J. Brandon Walsh, who wrote 'The Irish Tango,' 'Killarney and You,' and 'Harmony Bay'?"

I had heard the songs, and after an introduction I explained to Mr. Walsh my aspiration. Young Mr. Walsh looked very sad.

"I suppose your cousin on the south side said it was a dandy song," he sympathized. "Maybe it is. But if you'll come over to my office I'll show you 150 unpublished lyrics I have written in which 'love' and 'dove' rhyme just as nicely as they do in your ditty, which I trust you will not ask me to look over. Scores of amateurs visit the Chicago branch houses every day with their songs. The New York publishers get ballads by the ton in their mail. I suppose you want to make a contract right away without letting any one see your song for fear they'll steal it. Well, there are really a lot of smart people who are sure they can write song hits. A whole lot of them are gullible enough to be taken in by the fake houses, who ask $25 to $30 for printing 1,000 copies. They'll print anything—these houses will—for the $25 or $30. The farthest these songs ever get is the few copies that go to the friends of the victim."

I was thoughtful for a moment. I knew that Mr. Walsh had at least thirty songs on the counters that were fairly good sellers.

"Tell me," I asked. "You have written successful popular songs; do you really know anything about cotton fields or do you know any girls in 'Old Erin'?"

"Those little trifles aren't necessary," he answered. "It takes a Jewish writer really to do justice to the charms of the River Shannon. As for the cotton field stuff, why, a successful song writer friend of mine asked me the other day what color magnolias were. He was writing a southern song and he wanted to get hold of some word that would rhyme with the name of the flower."

No One Wants a Chicago Song.

Mr. Walsh was going over to the Randolph building in Clark street—a building in the heart of Chicago's rialto with song boosters and "caught acts" and pounding pianos on nearly every floor—and I tagged along, not exactly a hero worshiper, because I was so close to him in flesh and blood, but rather as an individual with my curiosity very much aroused. Mr. Walsh answered my questions as we walked along.

"Don't feel bad if you can't sell your song," he consoled. "From my experience in the business I am convinced that at least everybody tries to write a song once. There are probably 1,000,000 song writers in Chicago—400 are working at it, forty are having songs published, and about four are making any money. You didn't write your song about Chicago, did you? There've been about 9,000 'flivers' at that. No one wants a Chicago song, and no one knows why not. If you've written about a city it must be about New York or Frisco, and don't write about any state like Iowa, Wisconsin, or Illinois. Those names don't rhyme with anything.

"What people want is to be 'Down South in Dixie' or 'In the Blue Ridge Mountains of Virginia.' If you would sing a song about 'Take Me Back to Minnesota'—although it's a perfectly good state—they'd kill you. It's the man who has never been to New York who joins loudest in the chorus of 'Give My Regards to Broadway.' Education? It doesn't go in song writing at all. The more ungrammatical you are the better, and you can take all the license you want to, even to making moonbeams golden."

"Sometimes," I ventured, "when I first hear a song it sounds crazy."

"But by the time you hear it every place you go for a week you begin to fall for it," finished Mr. Walsh. "I don't dare go where I'm apt to hear songs myself. If the singer is using one of a writer's songs and knows he is present and not applauding, he is sore. And if the author of the song does applaud and some friend of his sees him doing it—good night!"

Hires a Song Boosting Crew.

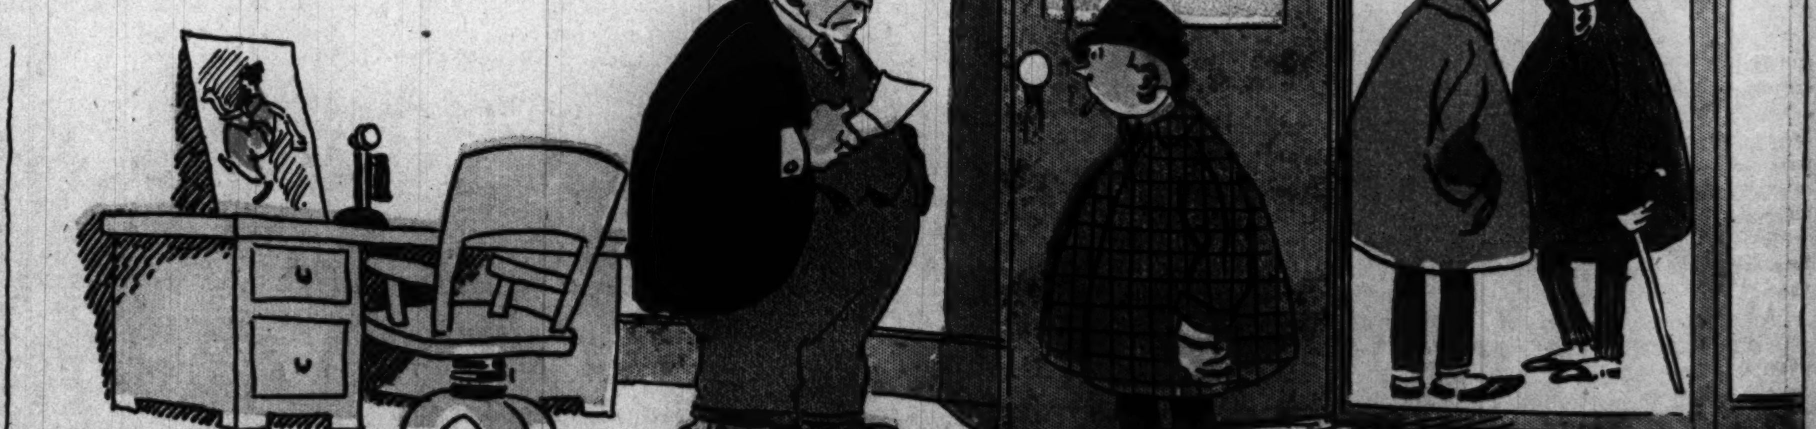
It was while I was up in the Randolph building that I met Al Beilin, who pays out $300 a week in Chicago to a Von Tilzer song boosting crew. Mr. Beilin I found in a most excited condition and not at all in the right mood to read over my ballad.

"You've written a song!" he exclaimed. "Well, what the devil do I care? Do you see this wire here? You knowwhattamean. Listen." (He shook the yellow telegram before me.) "We're paying this man at the Palace to use 'All Had a Finger in the Pie,' and here's a wire saying that he didn't put it on last night. O, your song you want to talk about? No, I don't want to see it. You've got as much chance to get it before a publisher as I have of getting an audience with a king. When these firms are guaranteeing a writer $10,000 a year in royalties they figure he can write anything they want, don't they? You knowwhattamean. It all depends on who introduces a song. Some big act has to take up your song, or you've got to have boosters. Outside of that there's no chance—no chance. The merit of a song means nothing. The public must hear it. If a star man writes it, the public's got to hear it for six weeks whether it likes it or not."

And Al turned from me to give orders to the fuzzy coated members of his crew who were about to depart for various theaters and cabarets. I decided to see the thing through to the finish, and partaking hurriedly of lunch I kept on the trail of "Sure Fire" Billie Roder and the spotlight basking team of "Foster and Stool," who were en route for a Cottage Grove avenue "gitney" house, where a "song publishers' contest" was on. I saw the arrangement made with the manager in the heavily lithographed, heavily electric lighted lobby; a slide containing the words were given to the moving picture operator and everything made ready to "follow the next reel."

It was surely some contest. "Aba, Daba, Daba, Daba, Said the Chimpee to the Monk." sung by a pair of youths who went through the antics of college yell leaders, had the audience "all doing it" for a while, but "Foster and Stool" took away the honors when they succeeded in getting five encores for a ballad about a girl "Way Down East," whose heart was yearning. The plumbers and the kitchen mechanics and the hair dressers and the teamsters didn't "fall" the very first time they had the words flashed before them on the screen, but about the fourth time their mouths were wide open joining in the song and their faces were all screwed up in sympathy for the girl whose heart was yearning. When those fuzzy coated, cloth top shoed, high C reaching, megaphone volumed, self-assured monopolizers of movie show spotlights, singing clear above them all, got in their close harmony on the final strain, the fate of the ditty was assured. Somehow all my own aspirations were forgotten; my ballad dealing with my affection for a girl living south of the Mason and Dixon line was torn up by me there in the courteous darkness; I went over to congratulate the contest victors.

"That's nothing," poohed Foster, "you'd ought to've seen me 'work' when I was plugging for 'The Curse of an Aching Heart.' Why, our team can take a song where 'alone' rhymes with 'home' and put it over. What's written don't count. Songs ain't written; they're boosted."



"YOU'VE WRITTEN A SONG," HE EXCLAIMED. "WHAT THE DEVIL DO I CARE."

$10,000 for an idea, which you must tell in 100 words or less.

There will be no second prize.

Only one first prize of $10,000 for the man, woman or child who gives the best idea to finish "The Million Dollar Mystery"!

READ THE CONDITIONS.

THE SUNDAY TRIBUNE prints today another installment of "The Million Dollar Mystery," a mystery story for the solution of which a prize of $10,000 will be given by the Thanhouser Film corporation. The story will run twenty-two consecutive weeks in THE SUNDAY TRIBUNE. As each chapter appears in THE TRIBUNE a two reel film corresponding with it may be seen in the various moving picture theaters. By this arrangement with the Thanhouser Film corporation it will be possible for TRIBUNE readers both to read the story and see the moving picture of it as it progresses from week to week. The first film was released on June 22. Each week another will be released until Monday, Nov. 16. The last chapter of the story will appear in THE TRIBUNE on Sunday, Nov. 22.

CONDITIONS GOVERNING THE CONTEST.

The prize of $10,000 will be won by the man, woman, or child who writes the most acceptable solution of the mystery, from which the last two reels of motion picture drama will be made and the last two chapters of the story written by Harold MacGrath.

Solutions may be sent to the Thanhouser Film corporation, either at Chicago or New York, any time up to midnight, Jan. 14. They must be received not later than that date. This allows eight weeks after the first appearance of the last film releases and seven weeks after the last chapter is published in THE SUNDAY TRIBUNE in which to submit solutions. The Chicago address of the Thanhouser company is 166 West Washington street and the New York City address is 71 West Twenty-third street.

A board of three judges will determine which of the many solutions received is the most acceptable.

The judges are to be Harold MacGrath, Lloyd Lonergan, author of the scenario, and Miss Mae Tinee of THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE.

The judgment of this board will be absolute and final. Nothing of a literary nature will be considered in the decision nor given any preference in the selection of the winner of the $10,000 prize. The last two reels, which will give the most acceptable solution to the mystery, will be presented in the theaters having this feature as soon as it is possible to produce same. The story corresponding to these motion pictures will appear in this newspaper coincidentally, or as soon after the appearance of the pictures as practicable. With the last two reels will be shown the pictures of the winner, his or her home, and other interesting features.

Solutions to the mystery must not be more than 100 words long. Here are some questions to be kept in mind in connection with the mystery as an aid to a solution:

No. 1—What becomes of the millionaire?

No. 2—What becomes of the $1,000,000?

No. 3—Whom does Florence marry?

No. 4—What becomes of the Russian countess?

Nobody connected either directly or indirectly with "The Million Dollar Mystery" will be considered as a contestant.

SYNOPSIS OF PREVIOUS CHAPTERS.

Stanley Hargreave, millionaire, having joined what he believed to be a great social movement, finds that in reality he has been trapped by the Black Hundred. After a miraculous escape from the den of the brilliant thieves, he lives the life of a recluse for eighteen years. One night, surrendering to a restless spirit of rebellion, Hargreave enters a Broadway restaurant and there comes face to face with the Black Hundred's leader, Braine.

After the meeting, during which neither man openly recognizes the other, Hargreave hurries to his magnificent Riverdale home and lays plans for making his escape from the country. He writes a letter to the girls' school in New Jersey, where, sixteen years before, he had mysteriously left on the doorstep of the institution his tiny baby daughter—named "Florence Gray" by the note attached to the basket—and arranges that she be sent to him at once. He also pays a visit to the hangar of a daredevil aviator.

Braine and members of his band surround Hargreave's home at night, but as they enter the house the watchers outside see a balloon leave the roof. The safe is found empty—the million which Hargreave was known to have drawn that day was gone. Then one of the men outside announced that he had punctured the balloon and sent it to the bottom of the ocean.

The next day Florence arrives from the girls' school and is greeted by the butler, Jones, whom Hargreave has taken into full confidence. She is later visited by Countess Olga, Braine's companion, who claims to be a relative. Two bogus detectives call, but they find themselves thwarted by Norton, a newspaper man, who happens to be on the scene at the right moment.

Later Florence is lured from home by the band, but succeeds in freeing herself from their clutches. The next day Jones removes a box from its hiding place and, pursued by Braine's men, rushes to the water front. A race in motor boats ensues and Jones drops the box into the sea.

Concealed above the rendezvous of the Black Hundred, a man learns of the recovery by a sailor of the box Jones dropped into the sea and of its subsequent return to the sea, and he quickly communicates the fact to Jones. A duplicate box is planted and later secured by the band, but before its contents are examined the box mysteriously disappears.

Through treachery in the Hargreave household Florence is delivered into the hands of an unscrupulous doctor, who is in the pay of the Black Hundred. From the faithful Susan, Norton learns that the doctor has declared that Florence is stricken with smallpox and that he is preparing to spirit her away. By acting quickly, the reporter, with the aid of Susan, succeeds in extricating the young woman from the danger after an encounter with members of the gang.

By chance Florence discovers a cave used by the Black Hundred. Being surprised by members of the band, she conceals herself and while in hiding learns of a mysterious paper which is of vital importance to her father's safety. At great risk to herself she secures the document.

CHAPTER XX.

"WHAT I want now," said Braine, as he paced the living room of the apartment of the countess, "is revenge. I've been checkmated enough, Olga; they're playing with us."

"That is nothing new," she replied, shrugging. "At the beginning I warned you. I never liked this affair after the first two or three failures. But you would have your way. You wanted revenge at that early date; but I cannot see that you've gone forward. Has it ever occurred to you that the organization may be getting tired, too? They depend solely upon your invention, and each time your invention has resulted in touching nothing but zero."

"Thanks!"

"O, I'm not chiding you. I've failed, too."

"Are you turning against me?" he demanded bitterly.

"Do my actions point that way?" she countered. "No. But the more I view what has passed the more disheartened I grow. It has been a series of blind alleys, and all we have succeeded in doing is knocking our heads. I can see now that all our failures are due to one mistake."

"And what the devil is that?" he asked, irritably.

"We were in too much of a hurry at the beginning. Hargreave prepared himself for quick action on your part."

"And if I had not acted quickly he would have started successfully on one of his world tours again, and that would have been the last of him, and we should never have learned of the girl's existence. So there's your argument."

"Perhaps you are right. But for all that we have not played the game with any degree of finesse."

"Bah!" Braine lit a cigaret and smoked nervously. "I can't even get rid of that meddling reporter. He has been as much to blame for our failures as either Jones or Hargreave. I admit that in his case I judged hastily. I believed him to be just an ordinary newspaper man, and he was clever enough to lull my suspicions. But I'm going to get him, Olga, even if I have to resort to ordinary gunman tricks. If there's any final reckoning, by the Lord Harry, he shan't get a chance in the witness stand."

"And I begin to think that that little chit of a girl has been hoodwinking me all along. By the way, did you find out what that letter said?" she asked after a pause.

"Letter? What letter?"

She sprang from her chair. "Do you mean to say that they have not told you about that?" Olga became greatly excited.

"Explain," he said.

"Why, I was at the garden day before yesterday, and a man approached and asked if I was Miss Hargreave. Becoming at once suspicious that something very important was about to happen, I signified that I was Miss Hargreave. The man slipped a paper into my hand and hurried off. I took a quick glance at it and was dumfounded to find it utterly blank of writing. At first I thought some joke had been played on me, then I chanced to remember the invisible ink letters you always wrote me. Understanding that you were to visit the cave in the morning, I had our man at the garden take the note. And you never got it!"

"Some one shall pay for this carelessness. I'll call up Vroon and Jackson at once. Wait just a moment."

He went to the telephone. A low muttering conversation took place. Olga could hear little or none of it. When Braine put the receiver back on the hook his face was not pleasant to see."

"That girl!"

"What now?"

"It seems she had been out horseback riding that morning. She had seen one of the boys cross the field and suddenly disappear; and she was curious to learn what had become of him. With her usual luck she stumbled on to the method of opening the door of the cave and went in. She must have been nosing about. She didn't have much time, though, as the boys came up to await me. Evidently she crawled into that old chest and in some inexplicable manner purloined the letter from Jackson's pocket. They left to reconnoiter; and it was then that Jackson discovered his loss. When Florence heard them returning she jumped into the well. And lived through that tunnel! The devil is in it!"

"Or out of it, since we consider him our friend."

"And I had her in my hands, note and all!"

"But with all that water there will not be any writing left on the letter."

"Invisible ink is generally indelible and impervious to the action of water; at least the kind I use is. I'd give a thousand for a sight of that letter."

"And it might be worth a million," Olga suggested.

"Not the least doubt of it in my mind. Olga, old girl, it does look as if my star was growing dim. We'll never get our hands on that million. I feel it in my bones. So let's settle down to a campaign of revenge, without any furbelows. I want to twist Hargreave's heart before the game winds up."

"You wish really to injure her?"

"I do not wish to injure her. Far from it," he replied, smiling evilly.

"You want her . . . dead?" whispered Olga, paling.

"Exactly. I want her dead. And so if all my efforts here come to nothing, so shall Hargreave's. His millions will become waste paper to him. That's revenge. The Persian peach method."

"Poison? You shall not! You shall not kill her!" vehemently.

"Tender hearted?"

"No. If I must in the end go to prison, so be it; but I refuse to die in the chair."

"Very well, then. We shan't kill her, but we'll make her wish she was dead. I was only trying to see how far you would go. The basket of peaches is in the hallway. Every peach is poisoned. No man in the country knows more about subtle poisons than I do. Have I not written books on the subject?" ironically.

"And they will trace it back to you in a straight line," she warned. "I will not have it!"

"I can go elsewhere," he replied coldly.

"You would leave me?"

"The moment you cross my will," emphatically.

It became her turn to pace. Torn between her love of the man and the danger which stared her in the face, she was for the time being distracted. All the time he watched her with malevolent curiosity, knowing that in the end she would concur with his evil plans.

"Very well," she said finally, "But listen; we shall be found out. Never doubt that. Your revenge will cost us both our lives. I feel it.'

"Bah! The law will have no hand in my end. I always carry a pellet; and that ring of yours would suffice a regiment. She will not die. She will merely become a kind of paralytic; the kind that can move a little but not enough; always wheeled about in a chair. I'll bring in the peaches, rosy and downy. One bite, after a given time, will do the trick. If they suspect and throw them out we have lost nothing but the peaches. A trusted messenger will carry them to the Hargreave house. And then we'll sit down and wait."

Meantime, in the library of the Hargreave house, Florence and Jim were puzzling over the blank sheet of paper.

"I'll wager," said Jim, "the water washed all the writing away. The fire does not seem to do any good. We'll turn it over to Jones. Jones'll find a way to solve it. Trust him."

"What are you two chattering about?" asked Susan, who was arranging some flowers on the table.

"Secrets," said Jim, smiling.

"Humph!"

Susan puttered about for a few minutes longer, then crossed to the reception room, intending to go upstairs. At that moment the maid was admitting a messenger with a basket of fruit.

"For Miss Hargreave," said he. He gave the basket to the maid, touched his cap awkwardly, and swung on his heel, closing the door behind him. He was in a hurry to deliver another message.

"O, what lovely fruit!" cried Susan, pausing. "I'm going to steal one," she laughed. She selected a peach and began eating it on the way up to her room.

The maid passed on into the library.

"What's this?" inquired Florence, as the maid held out the basket. She selected a peach and was about to set her white teeth into it when Jim interposed.

"Wait a moment, dear." Florence lowered the peach. Jim turned to the maid. "Who sent it?"

"I don't know, sir. A messenger brought it, saying it was for Miss Hargreave."

"Let me see if there is a card." But Jim searched in vain for the card of the donor. At once all his suspicions arose. "Don't touch them. Better let the maid throw them out. Fruit from unknown persons might not be the healthiest thing in the world."

"What do you think?"

"That in all probability it is poisoned. But there's no need trying to prove my theory right or wrong. Ask Jones. He'll tell you to throw them away."

"Horrible!" Florence shuddered. "But they do not want to poison me. I'm too valuable. They want me alive."

"Who can say?" returned Jim gloomily. "They may have learned that they cannot beat us, no matter what card they turn up. I may be wrong, but take my advice and throw them away. . . . Good Lord, what's that?" startled.

"Some one cried!"

"O, Miss Florence!" exclaimed the maid, terror stricken as she recalled Susan's act. "Miss Susan took a peach from the basket and was eating it on the way to her room!"

"Good heavens!" gasped Jim. "I was right. The fruit was poisoned."

Jim had head enough to send for a specialist he knew. The specialist arrived about twenty minutes after Susan's first cry. To his keen eye it looked like a certain poison which had for its basis the venom of the cobra.

"Will she live?"

"O, yes. But she'll be a wreck for some months. Send her to the hospital where I can visit her frequently. And I'll take that peach along for analysis. No police affair?"

"No. We dare not call them in," said Jim.

"That's your affair. I'll send down the ambulance. Keep her quiet. She'll have a species of paralysis, but that'll work off under the treatment. A strange business."

"So it is," agreed Jim grimly.

"You called me just in time. An hour later, nothing would have saved her. She would have been paralyzed for life."

Jim accompanied the doctor to the door and went in search of Jones. He found the taciturn butler eying the fruit basket, his face gray and drawn, though his eyes blazed with fury.

"Poison!"

"A pretty bad poison, too," said Jim. "We can't do anything. We've just got to sit still. But in the end we'll get them. That she devil . . . "

"No, my friend; that he devil. The woman is mad over him and would commit any crime at his bidding. But this is his work. We want him. He wasn't without courage to send this fruit, knowing that I would instantly suspect the sender. Yet I have no definite proof. I could not hold him in court in law. He will have bought the fruit piece by piece, the basket in a basket shop. He will have injected the poison himself when alone. Poor Susan! That messenger was without doubt some one over whom he holds the threat of the death chair. That's the way he works."

GRADUALLY, LETTERS BEGAN TO FORM ON THE BLANK SHEET.

Jim tramped the room while Jones carried the fruit to the kitchen. The butler returned after a while.

"What about that blank sheet of paper?"

"It has to be dipped into a solution; after that you can read it by heating. I have already dipped it into the solution. The moment the heat leaves the sheet the writing disappears again. The ink is waterproof. I'll show you."

Jones got a candle from the mantel, lit it, and held the sheet of paper very close to the flame. Gradually, almost imperceptibly, letters began to form on the blank sheet. At length the message was complete.

"Dear Hargreave—The Russian minister of police is at the Blank hotel under the name of Henri Servan. He is investigating the work of the Black Hundred in this country and can free you from their vengeance if you supply the evidence needed."

"Now, what evidence can he want?" asked Jim.

"Such as will prove Braine an undesirable citizen."

"And then?"

"Quietly pack him off to Russia, where he is badly wanted."

"Who sent this message?"

"One of our mysterious friends. We have a few, as you already know. But I'll go and make this man Servan a visit. I have seen the real minister, and if this man is the same one, something of importance may turn up. I shall want you somewhere about. Here, I'll let you have this letter. Remember, heat brings it out and cold air makes it vanish. Now I'll go up for a moment to see how that poor girl is getting along. We are lucky; there's no gainsaying that."

"You're a clever man, Jones," said Jim.

Jones turned upon him, his face grave. The two men looked steadily into each other's eyes. Jones was first to turn aside his glance, as he had something to conceal and Jim had nothing.

"I am going out and so is Mr. Norton. Do not leave the house; not even if you have a telephone call from me or Norton. Both of us will return; so don't let anything bother or confuse you."

"I promise," said Florence, struggling with a sob.

Jones went downstairs again, paused by a window as if cogitating, and suddenly threw it up and looked abroad. A rustle among the lilacs caused a smile to flit across his face. So they had sent some one to learn the effect of the poison? Or to follow him should he leave the house? He retired to the kitchen and gave some explicit orders to the chef, orders which did not in any way refer to cooking. Then Jones and the reporter left the house, each quite aware that they were being followed. Near the Blank hotel they separated in order to confuse the stalker. He might dodder and follow the wrong man. But it was evident that this time he had been directed to follow Jones; for he entered the hotel a minute after Jones.

Meantime a second spy, whom Jones had not seen, had observed the transfer of the invisible writing and had immediately informed Braine, who was not far away. That his poisoned fruit had stricken down an outsider troubled him none at all. But that mysterious message he meant to have; it might be a life and death affair, it might be a clew to the treasure or the whereabouts of Hargreave.

Jones scribbled his name on a blank card and had it taken to the Russian's room. The page eyed that card curiously. It was different from anything he had ever seen before. In one corner were written three or four words which resembled a cross between Hebrew and Greek.

"Humph!" muttered the boy. "Whadda d' know about that? Chicken scratches; but I guess the bell rings Roosian. On your way, Hortense," he cried to the hall maid, who wanted a look at the card. When the boy returned to Jones he said: "Up t' th' room, sir. He'll see yuh." The boy kept the silver salver extended expectantly, but Jones went past without apparently noticing the hint.

The Russian was standing by a window when Jones knocked and was bidden to enter.

"You are not Hargreave."

"Neither are you the Russian minister of police," urbanely.

"Who are you?"

"I am Hargreave's confidential man, sir."

The two men eyed each other cautiously.

"You speak Russian?'

"No. I am able to scribble a few words; that is all."

The Russian lit a cigaret and smoked leisurely. He was in no hurry.

"No, I am not the minister; but I am his accredited agent. I am empowered to bring back to Russia a man who is known here by the name of Braine, another by the name of Vroon, and a woman who calls herself a countess and unfortunately is one. All I desire is some damaging proof against them that they are outlaws in this country. The rest will be simple."

"They have all three taken out naturalization papers."

The Russian waved his hand airily. "Once they are in Russia those documents will never come to light. This man Braine, it has been learned, has long been in the pay of Prussia, and has given the general staff of that country many plans of our frontier fortifications. I do not know what any one of the three looks like. That is why I sought Hargreave."

"I will gladly point them out to you," said Jones, rubbing his hands together, a sign that he was greatly pleased.

"That will be very good of you, I'm sure," in a rumbling but perfectly legible English.

"And suddenly they all three will disappear?"

"Suddenly; and you may believe me that from that time on they'll be heard of never more."

"All this sounds extremely agreeable to me. Mr. Hargreave will be happy to hear that his long enforced hiding will soon come to an end."

"All you have to do, sir, is to point them out to me."

"It may take a week or ten days."

"My government has waited for ten years to gather in this delectable trio. A month, if you like."

"The sooner the better. I shall call this evening after dinner. We shall begin with Mr. Braine; and generally where he is is the woman. Vroon will be the most difficult."

"After dinner, then, since you know some of his haunts. There is a reward."

Jones laughed shortly. "Keep it yourself, sir. Mr. Hargreave would willingly double whatever this reward is to eliminate these despicable creatures from his affairs."

"Thanks."

While this conversation was taking place Norton idled about; and, feeling the cravings for a cigaret, prepared to roll one, only to find that he hadn't the "makings." So fate urged him to step into the nearest tobacconist's. He asked for his favorite brand and passed over the silver.

Braine and his companions saw Norton enter the shop. [illegible] agreed with their plans perfectly. The tobacconist happened to be affiliated with the order. So they hurried into the shop. Jim instantly realized that he was in a trap.

"How can I get out of here?" he whispered ot the tobacconist.

The latter smiled. "I have to obey these gentlemen. I don't know what they want you for; but if I made a move to help you I should find my own throat cut without saving yours."

"The devil!"

Jim made a dash for the rear door, to find it locked. Even as he fumbled with the key Braine and his companions flung themselves upon the reporter and overpowered him.

"Ah, my friend Braine!" he said.

"My friend Norton!" jeered the victor.

"And what do you want; some peaches?"

"A paper, my friend, a little sheet of paper with invisible writing on it. We promise to give you something in exchange for it."

"What?" asked Jim with as much nonchalance as he could assume.

"Life."

"Search," said Jim. "You won't object to my smoking?" He began to roll a cigaret while they passed over him. He struck a match; the pleasant aroma of tobacco floated about his head.

"He's got it on him somewhere. I saw him take it. He's got his nerve with him."

The cigaret glowed. Jim smoked hurriedly.

Through every pocket they went. The contents of his wallet lay scattered at his feet; his watch dangled from the chain. The cigaret grew shorter and shorter. Suddenly one of the men stretched out a hand and whisked the cigaret from Jim's lips. He threw it to the floor and stamped out the coal.

"I thought so!" he exclaimed, holding out the scrap of burnt paper toward Braine.

The words "Dear Hargreave" were all that remained of the message. With a snarl of rage Braine whipped out his revolver.

"I will give you one minute to tell me what that paper contained."

"And after that minute is up?"

"A bullet in your stomach."

Quick as a flash Jim's hand shot out, caught the loosely held revolver, gave it a wrench, and brought it down savagely upon Braine's head. Then he reversed it and back toward the front entrance.

"Au revoir, till we meet again, gentlemen!"

AUSTRIAN HYMN.

[Words by Laurenz Leopold Haschka. Music by Franz Joseph Haydn.]

God uphold thee, mighty emp'ror,
Monarch of our eastern land;
Pow'r and wisdom e'er attend thee,
Righteousness with thee shall stand,
Till with laurel crown'd a victor
All hearts bow at thy command.
God uphold thee and defend thee,
Emp'ror of our Austrian land!

Happy, flow'ry land! His scepter
Rules o'er valley, mount, and plain;
Mildly, calmly, justly ruleth,
He the people's love would gain.
Yet his weapon'd might, in splendor,
Beams through all the land amain.
God uphold thee, warrior, father,
Monarch of our Austrian land.

He delights the poor to cherish,
He awakes the minstrel's lay;
He would not that any perish,
All admire the gentle sway.
"Heaven reward him, God defend him,"
Thus we sing and thus we pray.
Emp'ror, monarch, father, kaiser,
All thy peaceful rule obey!

He from bondage will deliver,
He would make us truly free;
In the German heart shall ever
He the brightest mem'ry be,
Till in other worlds a welcome
Meets in blest eternity.
God defend thee, God attend thee,
Emp'ror Franz, all hail to thee!

THE words of this national hymn of Austria were written by L. L. Haschka in 1797, while the music was composed by the great master musician Franz Josef Haydn.

Franz Jozef Haydn was born in the little market town of Rohrau, in Austria. His parents were poor peasants, his father being a wheelwright by trade, and they lived in a tiny vine covered cottage. They were all fond of music, and when the day's work was done the father would sing old Austrian folk songs, the mother would play upon the harp, and little Franz Josef would sing in a clear soprano voice and accompany himself by scraping with a stick upon a piece of wood in imitation of a schoolmaster who played the violin. With his crude instrument he kept perfect time and astonished all who heard him. One day a cousin who was choir leader in Hamburg came upon a visit, and when he heard the little lad he asked Josef's parents to let the boy go home with him, where he might have more musical advantages. However, he put the boy to work in his own kitchen.

At one time this cousin boastfully told Herr Reuter, who was choirmaster of St. Stevens' church in Vienna, about the boy genius who was working in his kitchen. When Reuter heard the boy sing he was amazed at his beautiful voice and said, "He shall sing in my choir," so young Haydn went to Vienna and served under a new choirmaster and there began his real musical education.

While the other boys played, he practiced and worked at his music. He longed for lessons in composition, and when he got hold of some paper he began at once to write anthems.

Herr Reuter was jealous of this talented pupil, and so he ridiculed the sensitive little boy and never gave him any encouragement.

One time in choir practice young Haydn played a mischievous trick on one of the singers by snipping off the end of his wig. When the irate singer reported the deed to the choirmaster he flew into a rage and expelled the boy. It was winter and the weather was bitterly cold, and the poor boy wandered through the streets of Vienna without food or shelter. He became a street musician and earned enough to pay for a small attic room in the home of a barber named Kellar. Here in the loft bedroom he had an old harpsichord and he played and composed tunes, while he did odd bits of work about the place for the wig maker. He finally married Anna Kellar, the daughter of his host, but as she was ill tempered and uneducated they did not have a happy time together.

Haydn made many friends, and as his music became better known many famous people sought his friendship. Prince Esterhazy, who was the head of an old Hungarian family, became fond of the musician and invited him to live at the royal court at Esterhazy. Here he lived a happy life and studied and composed many of his greatest works. As his works were published he became famous in many countries, and wherever he traveled he was received with great honor.

When Haydn returned to Austria he went to his old home, Rohrau, and was much touched because the people there had erected a monument in his honor. When he went into the humble little home where he was born he stooped and kissed the doorstep.

Many famous musicians studied with Haydn, but the one whom he loved the dearest was the young composer Mozart, and Mozart playfully called his master "Papa Haydn." Haydn was indeed a father to many new forms of musical art. He was called the "father of modern symphony" because he gave the symphony its present form, and he was the author of the stringed quartet. He composed over 100 symphonies and many oratorios and anthems.

They say that when he was in England he was much impressed with the national song, "God Save the King," so later when war was declared on France he was anxious to give the Austrian people an anthem which would inspire them to deeds of patriotism, so he composed the music "God Preserve the Emperor" to the words writetn by L. L. Haschka in 1797. It was publicly sung on the emperor's birthday at the national theater in Vienna, and at once it became popular with the people. The emperor was so delighted that he sent Haydn his portrait and thanked him for the wonderful song. It is considered a masterpiece of composition, and Haydn himself was happy that he had been able to give it to the Austrian people.

He died May 26, 1809. All the world mourned for him and paid tribute to his memory. Fortunately he lived to enjoy much honor and fame, for he made music a universal language. Although he was world famous for his many creations, he was best beloved by the people of Austria for giving them this national hymn, which their soldiers are singing today.

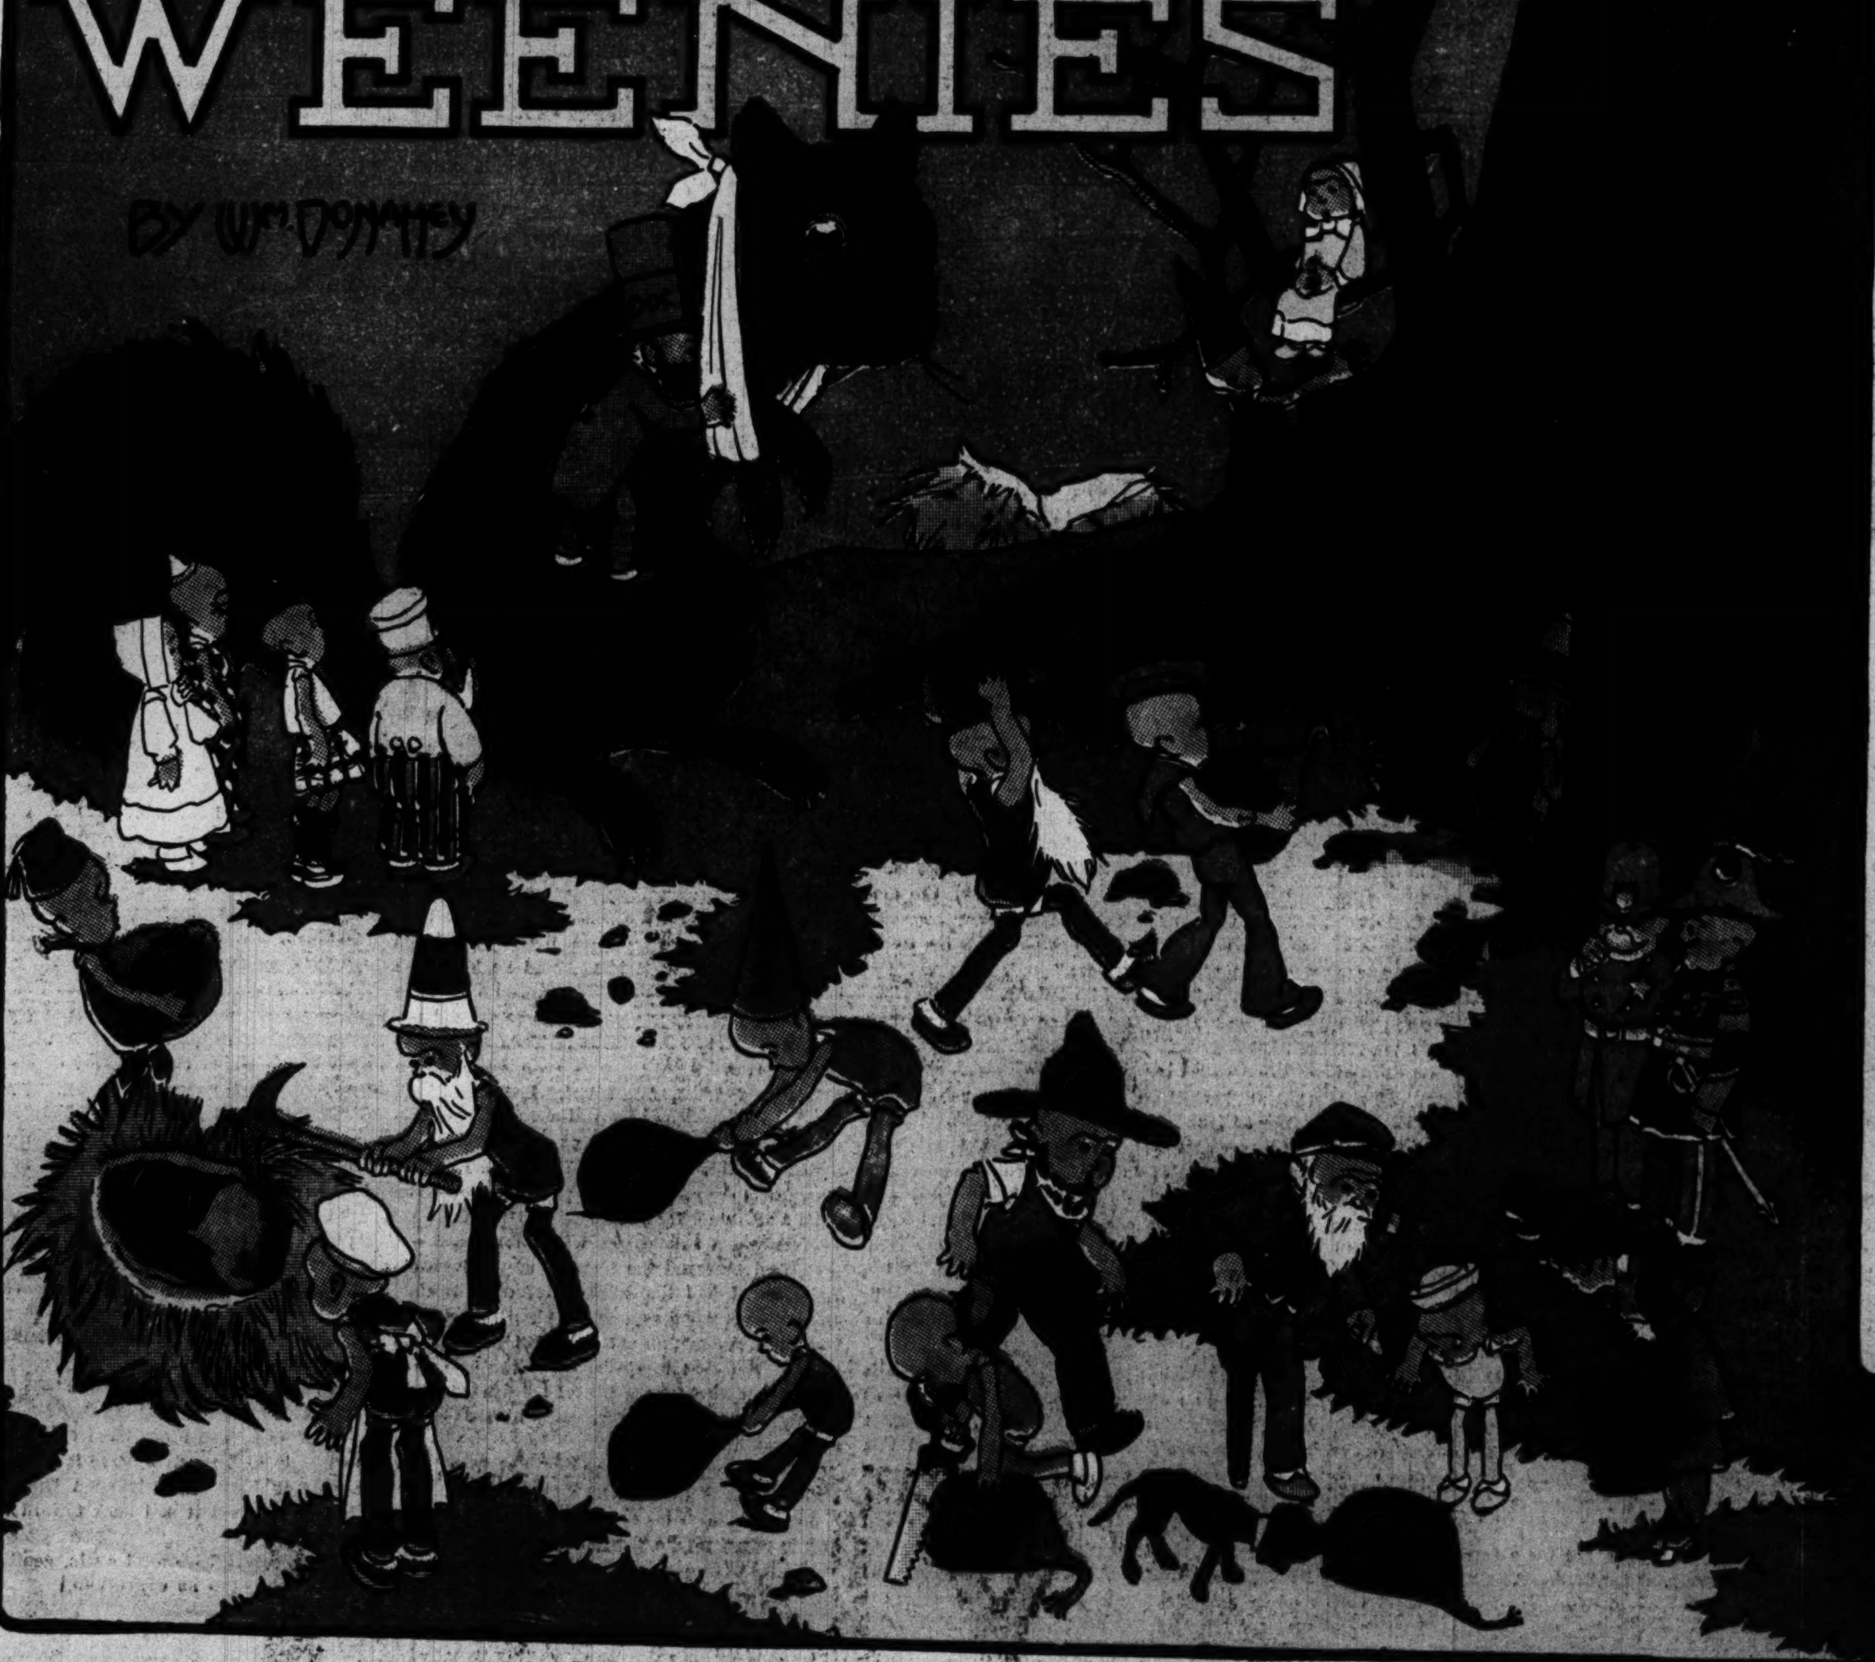
THE TEENIE WEENIES

BY WM DONAHEY



IT was a fine, warm fall day. There was just enough sunshine to take the chill out of the air. The Teenie Weenies were all outdoors, enjoying the fine weather. Some were sitting on the steps of their home, and others were lying on the grass. The Teenie Weenie boys were paying football, and the little girls were riding their Teenie Weenie dolls up and down in their little go-carts.

"I was just thinking," remarked the old soldier, "what a fine day it would be to go nutting."

"I know where there's a big chestnut tree," cried the cow boy.

"O, come on—let's go nutting—let's go nutting," chorused the Teenie Weenies.

"All right—get bags to carry the nuts in—and we had better take along a crowbar and a pick, for we will need them to pry the nuts out of the burs," said the old soldier.

The Teenie Weenies soon had everything ready, and started off on the long walk to the woods where the chestnut trees grew. They found lots of nuts on the ground, some of them in the burs, just as they had fallen from the tree; and the Teenie Weenies had great fun digging them out, though some of them were badly scratched by the sharp burs.

"Hark! Did you hear that?" cried the Turk.

"No; what was it?" asked the cook.

"Why, it sounded as though some one was sobbing," answered the Turk.

"O dear! O dear!" sobbed a voice from the other side of the tree. "What shall I do?"

The Teenie Weenies cautiously tiptoed round, and there, leaning against the tree, they saw a red squirrel with great tears rolling down his hairy cheeks.

"What's the matter?" timidly asked the policeman.

"I—I—have been shot," wailed the squirrel. "A hunter shot at me a little while ago—and—and my front leg is broken, and I won't be able to gather in my store of nuts for the winter, and—and I'm afraid I'll starve to death. Boo-hoo! boo-hoo!"

"Don't cry," said the general. "We'll help you. The doctor will set the bone in your leg, and if you will show us where you live we will carry in enough nuts to supply you for the winter."

"O—would you do that?" exclaimed the squirrel. And he quickly dried his tears and really tried to smile.

"Some of you fellows," ordered the doctor, "go home and get our large table cloth, and I'll make a sling for Mr. Squirrel to carry his lame leg in."

The Teenie Weenies carried nuts through a hole into the tree and filled the squirrel's storeroom with enough food to last him through the long winter.

"I don't know how I'm going to repay you for your great kindness," said the squirrel. "If I can ever be of service to you, I wish you would call on me." And, making a bow, he limped into his home.

WINTER FURS FLARE IN COATS and EXPAND IN MUFFS

says LOUISE JAMES

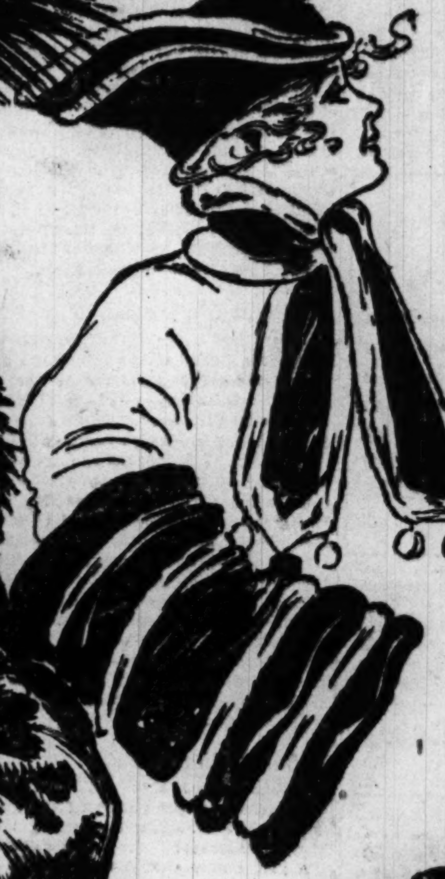
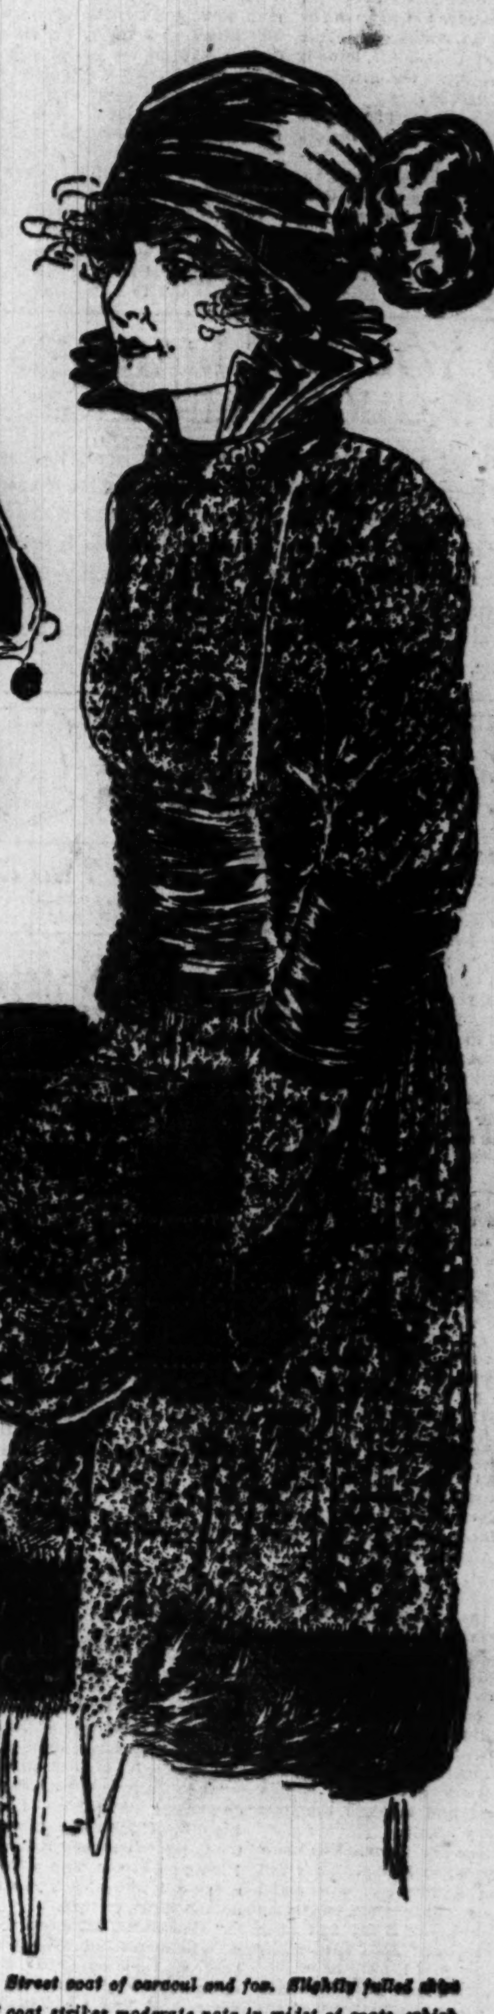
Evening wrap of broadtail caracul edged with pointed fox.



Witching set of ermine and seal, which is stylish and unique. Same effect carried out in hat, except that velvet is used instead of seal.



Street coat of caracul and fox. Slightly fulled skirt of coat strikes moderate note in midst of coats, which are flaring so hugely that it will only be a matter of time when the flare will have "flared" itself out.

With the future of furs problematical and the present situation precarious, the fact remains that furs are more abundant and less expensive this season than they have been for some time past. Wide latitude is permitted too in the adapting of styles to individuality, and the varied assortment of furs of all kinds and descriptions to be seen in the city shops is both fascinating and alluring. All of the latest fashion notes predominate, marking this year's fur displays distinct from the more conventional ones of previous years.

IF it is true that all women look well in furs, then this surely should be a season of universally attractive women, for never before have I seen a more abundant display of furs than is being offered in the shops of this city just now. They are reasonable, too, in price, lower, if anything than a year ago this time, and even more varied in their assortment.

This "moderation note" is particularly interesting in that it is being sounded at the present time, when the future of furs is problematical. The war is having an unavoidable effect on the dye factories of certain of the European cities, and this fact in itself makes the pelt situation precarious. And while furriers the city over are not allowing any woeful predictions to escape them concerning a possible upleap in prices next year, neither are they particularl yoptimistic. "Sufficient unto the day" seems to be the basis of their present philosophy, and women are following their example and adopting the same comfortable viewpoint.

I had a novel experience in connection with this same fur question. I spent a day among the exclusive fur stores and shops of the city, and at the end of some ten hours I was in a strange state of exhilaration commingled with despair. I had all the buoyancy of spirit you feel after you have looked at gorgeous scenery, or wonderful pictures, or rare old books. But I was possessed, too, of all the despondency that is sure to follow a prolonged session of star gazing at the utterly unattainable. I was shown everything, you see, even to the pieces of fur that strayed in price to four round figures.

of fur styles you can hardly fail to have them satisfied. The variety of fashions in furs is almost as great as that along other clothes lines. Wide latitude is allowed in adopting styles to individuality. This is perhaps the precise reason I found the assortment so fascinating, so thoroughly alluring.

Seal Made Up in Latest Fashions.

No matter what your preferences are in the matter Mr. Burgess of Shayne's had much to say on the subject of seal coats. Both the real seal and the Hudson seal are made up with many of the latest fashion notes predominating over the more conventional cuts of previous years. All the piquancy of the smart flare which is seen in cloth coats and dresses is reflected in the three-quarter length seal wrap. Different from the draped models of last year, these fall in bell-like lines. They may or may not be belted. This does not hold true in the case of all evening wraps. They are still more or less draped, especially when they are not all of fur, but combined with silk and satin. Wonderful brocades, too, lined these seal and Hudson seal coats. These brocades, by the way, are imported, of course, and should be appreciated while they last. None can tell from the present state of affairs when we will be wearing imported linings again.

Then, too, I saw some sets of the stone martin, that martin which is worn so well with the now fashionable shades o fbrown. Probably no other factor has been so influential in the popularizing of the stone martin as the vogue of brown the country over. The muffs of this fur were of the pillow shape with fur tails. Pillow shapes are still as modish as ever, despite the fact that many of the newer shapes are smaller and not so expensive.

Russian and German fitch are extremely attactive when they are used for trimming as well as for whole pieces. Mr. Rich of Bishop's mentioned the growing vogue of the real silver fox, as well as the substantial favor in which marten is still held. Blue fox and taupe fox, of course, are both expensive. There is a new taupe wolf, which is being used as an effective substitute for the taupe fox.

Marten in the fur field is something like broadcloth in the fashion field. It is never the dernier cri, and yet it is always to be depended on for service and for style.

Did you ever become captivated by a light tailored coat in mountain leopard? Mr. Roak of Carson, Pirie, Scott Co. had some of them to show me. For motoring they would be inimitable.

Making Fur Coats Longer.

Mrs. C. Henning is inclining to length in her fur coats. Many of them are longer than forty inches, and plain, too. She also has some awfully attractive monkey fur sets with the muff cosy and round and the collar small and inclining to the military in style. If you are partial to chinchilla squirrel and fitch combinations you can get them made up into unusual scarfs and novel muffs. But the real chinchilla is expensive—quite as expensive, indeed, as the Russian sable.

Mme. Gielsdorf is offering stunning effects in the natural blue fox, muffs large with the animal's head conspicuous. Also I saw some attractive stone marten sets, where the muffs showed every sign of growing smaller and looked like nothing so much as a round ball of equisite fur. If you are partial to combinations of materials you should see her sable, ermine, and seal sets made up with net and velvet.

Barrel muffs seem to be on the wane in popularity. Almost every other conceivable style goes, however. There are the flat muffs, the pillow shaped muffs, the melon muffs. There are not, however, many novel combinations to be seen in the way of neck muffs. One fur combined with another is almost too popular.

Sealskin coats are trimmed, if one wishes, with ermine, fitch, skunk, or marten. Marshall Field & Co. were showing some wonderfully handsome coats along the seal and ermine or seal and marten combinations. Seal goes well with both the Russian and German fitch.

At Otto May & Co.'s the ermine offerings would prove particularly alluring to any woman with a distinct leaning in her heart towards that fur. And incidentally ermine is one of the few furs that have gone up in price. Among all othe others the price is lower than last year.

Mr. Ranke of Periolat, Ranke & Co. was not particularly encouraging on the subject of the stationary prices of German and Russian fitch, but they haven't taken a plunge yet. So why cross bridges before they are reached? He is offering some stunning pointed fox sets, and some attractive mink, too. Mink is at about th same stationary stage of popularity as martin, and out of town trade is always good in mink.

At the London Fur company I came across some handsome seal coats, which were unusually long in length. The collars, too, were unusually pleasing. One was of black fox in a flaring butterfly effect. This ultra feminine note was combined with an ultra masculine and military one, which consisted of a long tab down the back and a military cut in the front.

Mr. Corn of the Majestic Fur company laid emphasis on the silk and velvet and fur combinations to be had in the new muffs—and, by the way, he is firm in the conviction that monkey is not durable, and that while it passes well enough and is attractive in the capacity of trimming, it is not so satisfactory when it is brought into play in whole muffs and neck pieces.

Doris Blake Says

"The son for whom most is done, turns out too often to be the least comfort to his parents."

Articles by Doris Blake and her replies to letters appear every day in "The Daily Tribune."

"NO one knows how I have set my hopes on that boy," said a mother to me, speaking of her eldest son. "Because he is clever, his father and I have denied ourselves to give him a better education than the others will have. Yet he is the first to turn round with a saucy answer when spoken to! I begin to see now that the one whom we have done most for and on whom we have lavished so much affection will in all probability be the least comfort to us."

How many mothers have felt like this and bitterly acknowledged the truth to themselves?

This particular boy was a nice enough lad when he went to a grade school with his brothers and sisters, but success has spoiled him. He sees the ignorance of his parents and covertly ridicules it, lords it over his younger brothers, and generally makes himself intolerable.

When I heard him answer his mother back in an impudent manner my fingers itched to give him a thrashing. Fortunately his mother is a sensible woman. Instead of quietly accepting his faults as the natural outcome of success, she realizes that her son is at the critical age when these airs and graces can, with firmness, be eradicated once and for all.

Still, it did seem to me hard that such affection, pride, and self-denial on the part of the parents should be so thoughtlessly and thanklessly returned. It is not at all uncommon, unfortunately, and the mother who sees trouble brewing in a like direction will be wise to deal with it promptly both for her own and her child's sake.

Happily, there are always opposites. I know the mother of one young man who, through scholarships, won his way through the university. Now, occupying a responsible position, he is the greatest comfort and pride of her life, and the courtesy and consideration with which he treats the father, who worked long hours to provide for him, and the mother who cleaned offices so that he might have his expensive school books, is a real pleasure to behold. He, indeed, is one of nature's gentlemen.

Writes Once a Week.

"Dear Miss Blake: I am a young man of 22 and I am in love with a girl of 18. She does not love me as much as I do her and as we are a good distance apart she doesn't write to me but once every seven or eight days and I write her every three days. Should I ask her to write oftener, as I know she has the spare time? Am I wrting too often? Do you think I will outlive my desire to get married inside of three years? R. E. P."

One letter a week is plenty for the girl to write to you. You have no right to expect her to write oftener. You should have other girl friends and tell her that you want her to have other boy friends.

Have you a perplexing love affair? Do you need the advice of a sympathetic, capable woman? Write to Doris Blake, care CHICAGO TRIBUNE. Inclose a stamped, addressed envelope if you wish a personal reply.

It will be entirely wrong for you to expect her to stay at home all the time merely because you cannot be with her. It depends entirely upon how much you love the girl whether or not you will outgrow your desire to marry her. If you truly love her of course you will want to marry her. You will be just as eager to marry her in three years as you are now.

Dances on His Feet.

"Dear Miss Blake: There is a certain young lady whom I have gone out with several times, especially to dances, but she is so clumsy that she always steps all over my feet when we dance and as I have very tender feet it pains me something awful. How can I tell her to walk on her own feet without offending her? Also, she always chews gum, and I would like to break her of this awful habit, as I don't like it. CHARLEY."

Why do you take the girl to dances if she does not know how to dance? You could not say to her what you think of saying without being guilty of a grave discourtesy. You better get another dancing partner if your feet wont stand for the clumsy one. The best way I know of breaking a girl of gum chewing is to say something about gum chewing being an unpleasant habit. Do not say it at the exact time that she is chewing gum, for that would be too unkind, but bring the subject up at some other time and express yourself vigorously on the subject.

A Broken Engagement.

"Dear Miss Blake: A girl becomes engaged to a fellow and he gives her a diamond ring. For some reason the engagement is broken and she wants to return the ring to him, but he says she can do whatever she wants with it, as he does not want it. What would you advise her to do, and is it all right for the girl to wear the ring, as every one knows that they have parted and do not intend to renew the engagement? R. O. G."

No matter what the young man says, the girl should return the ring to him. She has broken the engagement, and she has no right to wear a symbol of an engagement. It would be most indelicate for the girl to wear the ring. I do not see how she can bear to have it with her when she has stopped loving the man who gave it to her.

Where Shall He Walk?

"Dear Miss Blake: Will you kindly tell me the proper position for a young man while escorting two young ladies down the street? A READER."

A young man should walk on the outside when he is escorting two ladies.

She Isn't Divorced.

"Dear Miss Blake: After being married for some time, my husband left me, giving no reason whatever and making no explanation to me. As you no doubt realize, I need recreation, and I have every opportunity to make friends, but I hesitate, not being divorced. I am unable to find out anything about his whereabouts. Do you think it advisable for me to accept the company of gentlemen when an opportunity permits, and also would you think it advisable to tell them that I am married and explain the circumstances? I. C."

It would be decidedly unjust for you to accept the attentions of any man as long as you are legally bound to your husband. Until you obtain a divorce from him or know that he is no longer living you have no right to allow other men to pay their attentions to you.

DID YOU GET MARRIED THROUGH FLIRTING?

I have received a number of vigorous protests in my mail against a statement I made recently that flirting is a losing game for woman every time. In every case the protesting correspondent cites as evidence of the error of my statement his or her own happy marriage, which resulted from a flirtation. I want to hear from other readers on this subject. I want personal experiences only. Did you find flirting a losing game or not? The Tribune will pay $1 for every letter published. Address Doris Blake, Chicago Tribune, Chicago.

Love Letters

Afraid to See Him.

This week's best love letter from a woman to a man is submitted by Miss N. K., 36 Church street, as follows:

"I gasped when I recognized your writing after eight long years, and my mind ran wild to learn its mission. So you are coming west and you are bringing your wife with you—and you want her to meet me. Not that it matters, but I am just wondering why. I believe I'd like to see her, but I am not going to be at home, I am running away from it.

"You remember eight years ago when you wrote me you said you were a coward for writing me to forgive and forget? Well, dear, I, too, am a coward, because I am afraid to see you.

"You thought, so you wrote me, that I'd forget, but deep in your heart you knew I would not. Yet, I have not been totally unhappy. I have had my work and buried myself deep into it, and then, too, there are the memories. Not often do I dare trust myself to think; but now I am going to think, going to let down the bars of my will and tell you all.

"You wonder I never wrote to tell you of myself and that perhaps everything was going well with me. I have written you a thousand letters in my heart, but could not send them. Eight years ago when the letter came I sat down and wrote you just two lines, to let you know I understood and there was nothing to forgive. And then the struggle began. It has never ended; sometimes victorious for a time, then the scent of a flower, a rare June day, the song of a bird at dusk whispering some little memory of you, and then the desire to see you, to hear you, to feel your arms about me almost overwhelms me.

"You wrote of your friendship unchanged and unchanging. It was not your friendship—it was your love I wanted. I gave you up to another woman, but the desire I could not stifle. It was stronger than I and through the long years I have been afraid.

"I am glad you are happy. You know I always wanted you happy. They tell me you are well and have prospered and your wife adores you; this, too, makes me glad, for it shows you faced your duty without faltering and that she never knew she was not first in your heart.

"But I cannot see you. It is enough to know that you are the husband of another; but to see you together—well, I'll ask, have you ever suffered and been obliged to laugh and talk? Have you ever pulled at your very heart strings and smiled through your pain? Yet you ask this of me. I am neither strong nor brave enough to equal it.

"Sincerely, M."

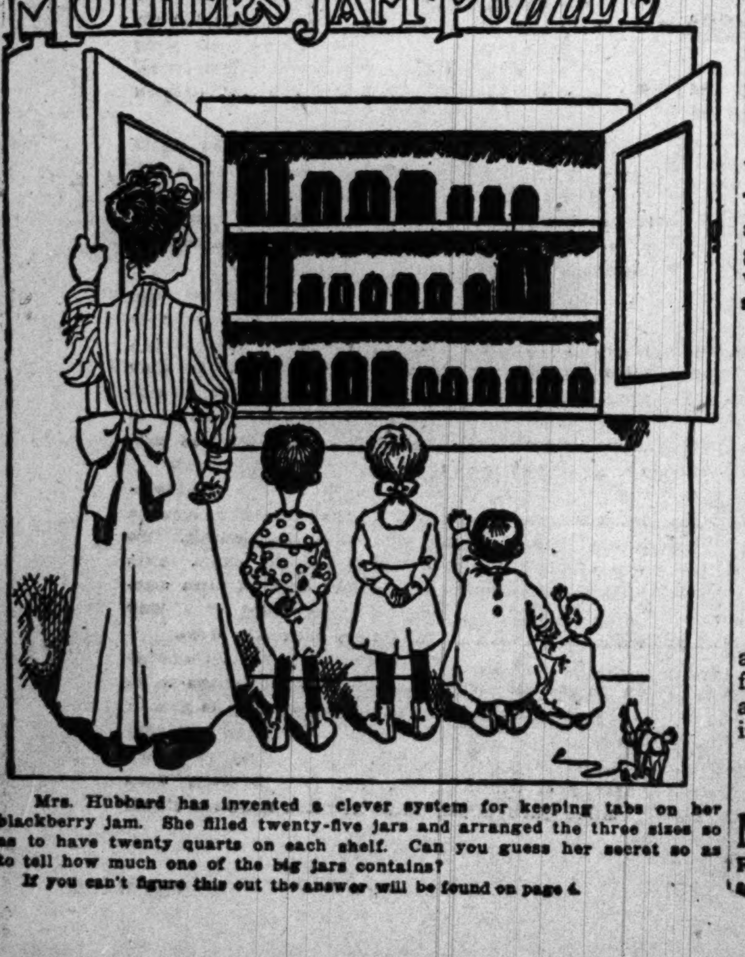
MOTHER'S JAM PUZZLE



Mrs. Hubbard has invented a clever system for keeping tabs on her blackberry jam. She filled twenty-five jars and arranged the three sizes so as to have twenty quarts on each shelf. Can you guess her secret so as to tell how much one of the big jars contains?

FLATFOOT CAUSES ACHES and PAINS

says LILLIAN RUSSELL

[Copyright: 1914: By Lillian Russell.]

ONE of the most common ailments prevalent among men and women—but more especially among women—is backache in some form or other, to relieve which distressing condition all kinds of pills, lotions, and other remedies are indiscriminately taken. Whether such remedy brings relief from the painful symptoms is extremely doubtful, but even if it does ease the situation, the relief gained is rarely of a permanent character, for the old trouble has a way of recurring immediately the medicine is discontinued.

Now, while backache may arise from various causes, from deranged kidneys, for instance, in which case it is wise to secure medical advice, or from weakness in the spine, similarly it may arise from another contributory cause which is not often taken into consideration—that is, flat foot. Flat foot contracted, the process of walking is, to say the least, a painful operation. The result is that not only is pain experienced in the feet and ankles when walking, but it generally extends to the legs, and hence to the lumbar region, the back.

Flat foot is a condition whereby the arch of the foot becomes broken down. You may or may not have noticed that the under part of the human foot is arched, also that when you walk the middle of the foot does not touch the ground. When you walk correctly the foot touches the ground at the heel and ball of the foot, while the arch under the foot acts as a kind of spring for balancing and distributing the weight of the body, which falls upon the foot. It is the regular use of this arch, or spring, when walking or exercising that keeps the cartilages and muscles of the foot lubricated and in a healthy condition. Deprive the foot of exercise and so allow the weight of the body to unduly and unevenly press upon the spring and, like every other spring that is subjected to excessive pressure. It becomes weakened until it finally snaps or breaks down, as in flat foot.

Thus they who stand for many hours at a stretch frequently contract flat foot, and as a consequence experience more or less pain in the back and in the body generally, due to the uneven strain that is thrown upon the spine and other parts of the body in walking. It is not until the foot ailment is remedied that backache is relieved and a better bodily condition is established.

Cure for flat foot is quite possible, yet many people who develop this painful ailment neglect to apply any means whereby to remedy it other than the wearing of a steel spring in the shoe. True, this contrivance is of considerable value as an aid in walking and as an auxiliary in curing the defect, but exercise pure and simple is the only reliable method by which the muscle fibers in the foot can be made strong and resilient again.

The care of fite foot consists of a few simple exercises. These regularly performed, improvement may be reasonably expected.

Exercise 1—Stand on the toes, big toe pointing to big toe. Lower the body on to the flat of the foot; raise and lower alternately.

Exercise 2—Sit on a chair and point the toes toward the ground. Raise and lower the foot several times in quick succession.

Exercise 3—Sit in a chair, feet twelve inches apart. Place the heels firmly on the ground, tilt the toes up toward the ankles, balance to heels. A capital exercise this is, by the way, for warming cold feet.

Exercise 4—Yet another useful exercise for strengthening the muscles of the instep, ankles, and foot generally is the one depicted in exercise 4. Sit with feet together. Move toes outward until heel touches back of heel.

Massage of the foot will be found an excellent auxiliary in curing flat foot. Soak the feet in hot water for a minute or two at night before retiring; dry thoroughly and massage under the soles and over the instep with warm olive oil. To warm the oil pour a little of it into a saucer. Fill a small basin with boiling water. Place the saucer over the boiling water and in a few seconds the oil will be thin and warm enough for use. In the morning bathe the feet again in warm water, then cold. Dry and massage under the soles, over the instep, and up the ankle.

Incidentally, it might be mentioned that tired feet can be soothed by bathing them in hot water, to which a little salt has been added, the water being well splashed up the leg with the bare hands.

Wear comfortable stockings—heavy ones for winter, thin ones for summer—and see that the heels of all footwear are neither too low nor too high, but of a comfortable height. With the body balanced upon comfortable shoes, any tendency to strain the muscles and ligaments of the foot is avoided, and the possibility of the development of flat foot is reduced to a minimum.

Lillian Russell's Beauty Secrets.

G. H.: Borax will soften the water; it is also cleansing. Put just a small pinch of borax into the water when washing your face or when shampooing your hair. It is harmless, provided you do not use too much of it. Oatmeal is good for the complexion. It is often used in place of soap. The best way of using it is by placing it in small cheesecloth bags, then using these as you would a wash cloth. It will make the face soft and smooth.

B. A.: Yes, wind and dust will make the face rough unless it is protected. If you will rub a good cold cream into your skin before going out riding, then take off surplus cream and apply a good face powder, it will protect your face and keep it from getting rough. If you expect to go on a long motor trip take along a good supply of cold cream. It cleanses the face quickly and protects the skin. Never apply water to your face after riding in the wind. It roughens the skin and irritates it. It is also wise to wear a veil for protection. If you care for my formula for cold cream, send me a stamped addressed envelope and I shall gladly send it to you.

E. S.: Unequal hips usually result from faulty standing attitudes, which should be corrected immediately. The habit of carrying books or packages and letting them rest on the hips will make them uneven. A simple exercise which might correct this trouble is as follows: Stand erect, with heels together; drop all your weight on your left foot (as the right hip is the one that is uneven), count ten, then stand erect again. Do this many times.

J. M.: Five minutes' exercise in the morning upon arising will help you wonderfully. First practice deep breathing, if only for a few moments. Stand in front of an open window and take deep, full breaths of the fresh air. Force the air down into your lungs, breathing through the nostrils and expelling the breath through the nostrils. It is not necessary to open the mouth at all. A good exercise is as follows: Stand erect, with heels together; extend arms shoulder height; take a deep breath, and at the same time bend the knees; rise. Do this five times. This is a splendid, invigorating exercise. Yes, I do believe in gymnastics for girls. If they were all allowed more freedom of movement and vigorous muscular exercise they would be healthier and stronger I am sorry I cannot give you the name of a school.

How I Reduced My Flesh.

A Simple Exercise.

By using the exercise touching the ground with fingers, without bending the knees, in about three months' time I reduced my hips almost four inches and my waist two inches. Feeling I was not too heavy otherwise, I found this method satisfactory. In a month's time friends noticed and spoke of my decrease in size. Now I take a few exercises, but at first took twenty-five night and morning with open window. M. W.

Experiments with Diets.

The only successful way of reducing weight that I have tried is a German method suggested by a physician. It is a diet, but as no two people are alike, you find out by experiment the foods that fatten you and then make your own diet accordingly.

The experiment takes six weeks. Carefully weigh yourself when you begin and keep exact record of the number of pounds lost each week. Try living on toast (buttered or plain) with coffee or tea for the first week. The second week try vegetables (omitting potatoes). The third week is perhaps the most difficult, as you have to live on meat alone. Eat any kind, cooked any way, but nothing else but tea or coffee with it. The fourth week eat fruit, and contrary to what people think, you lose less in this week than the others, as fruit contains so much sugar. Bananas are to be omitted. The fifth week try bread and milk. The last week try eating everything you like, but not drinking anything for two hours before until two hours after meals.

At the end of the sixth week you make out your diet, avoiding those foods which you lost the least weight on. The average loss of weight during the trial is from one to three pounds. S. B. W.

* *

A Successful Method.

I have reduced my weight by drinking no water or other liquid with my meals nor for an hour before and after meals. My weight was from 200 to 225 pounds, but after eight months of dry meals I have succeeded in reducing to 150 pounds. The results have been satisfactory and safe, for my health remains good. J. R.

* *

Hasn't Starved.

Learning that a woman five feet five inches tall should weigh 140 pounds, I set about to reduce my flesh. I then weighed 147 pounds and was fleshy nowhere but around my hips.

First, I make myself refuse a second helping of anything, cut lunch entirely out, and exercise on every possible occasion; in other words, keep active. I eat plenty of fruit but eliminate all rich pastries and drink plenty of filtered cistern water.

At night and morning I take the exercise for reducing the abdomen, placing my knees together and touching the floor ten times. At first this was hard, but now it is very pleasant and easy. My measurements have decreased quite noticeably, and in less than three months I have reduced my weight to 133¼ pounds and have not starved myself either.

I have no inclination to flesh in summer, but my appetite increases with the cold weather. O. J. A.

For over three years I have been giving instructions on how to reduce flesh to the women of America through the columns of THE TRIBUNE. I have recommended various exercises, dietaries, and baths. Now I want my women readers to write to me and to tell me just what they have accomplished in the way of flesh reducing. I want to know what instructions of mine you followed, how many pounds you succeeded in losing, and the time it took to rid yourself of the superfluous weight. I also want to hear from women who have succeeded in reducing their flesh by measures other than those I have recommended.

Letters containing references to proprietary medicines or apparatus will not be considered.

THE TRIBUNE will pay $1 for every letter published. Address Lillian Russell, SUNDAY TRIBUNE, Chicago.

NO accessories in a room so certainly create or destroy the effect as those of light and lighting fixtures. By careful manipulation of these the most wonderful changes may be made. Instinctively, women feel that a light is becoming or unbecoming, and the success of a room is made or marred accordingly.

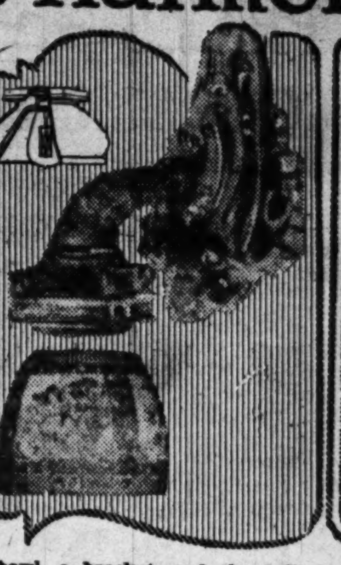
Many seemingly unaccountable triumphs or failures of public dining rooms or places of entertainment might be traced directly to the fact that the lighting arrangement was flattering or the reverse to the women patrons. If the lighting was not at least becoming, the place was doomed in spite of everything.

The best time in which to consider the arrangement of light in the home is, of course, while the home is in process of construction, but in a finished house or apartment, if the wiring has been insufficiently planned, it need not be a matter of despair. Deficiencies in lighting may be easily remedied. Many electric novelties have appeared even within the last few weeks. Some of the most attractive are by no means as expensive as the old elaborate atrocities.

Note, for instance, the difference in the artistic effect between the large, soft silk shades used over drop lights in the dining room and those creations of cheap colored glass and beads that were formerly so popular and that, for some unaccountable reason, we called "domes." The silk shades are beautiful and not costly. They may, in fact, be made at home for a trifling sum.

Any beautiful vase may be converted into a lamp. The wire, attachment, plug, drilling, shade holder, and assembling should not cost more than $1.50. With this inexpensive equipment but little skill is required to put on the finishing touch; that is to say, a hand made shade of cretonne or silk.

Candlesticks adapt themselves well to use for electric wiring and make the most attractive dresser, tea table, and bedside lights.



A bowl, a bracket, and the indirect light to be placed in the bowl.

So great is the variety of lighting fixtures nowadays that it would be impossible to pass upon them. It must be said, however, that good taste has finally asserted itself after a strenuous struggle against some of the manufactured lamps, with huge roses on their base and red glass globes set with "jewels" or adorned with dragons. Slowly but surely the simple three branch candlesticks have resumed their right to first place in the affection of the householder.

Many exquisite foreign pieces are being copied. Some dainty lantern-like fixtures are finding their way into our front halls instead of colored glass and crude beads. Quaint shades, amateur made, consist of colored fashion plates, cut from magazines published about the time of the civil war. These are mounted in panels. Others in paper panels are made of five or six little Japanese prints framed in tiny black frames and hinged together in octagonal shapes. These prints may often be found for as little as 3 cents apiece. Still more are made of cretonne, silk, or chintz, gathered or stretched on to ready made wire frames.

As almost every one has an extra vase that could be converted into a lamp, a pretty lamp shade that would go with any vase would make an attractive Christmas gift. Any of the stores selling the material for these will give instructions as to how they should be put together.

The ideal arrangement in the drawing room is to have a number of different sorts of lights, a center light, side brackets, table lamps, and standing floor lamps with either direct or indirect lighting, some for their use and others merely for their beauty. The rich chandelier gracefully hung with clusters of crystal globes may depend from the center of the room. Rafter lights may also grace the ceilings, but the chances are that, excepting for formal affairs, these will be left unlit, while, for ordinary occasions, the wall sconces will be used with an arrangement of double lamps having pretty silk shades glowing over good pieces of Chinese porcelain. This gives to the room a more informally at home appearance. One or two intricate lighting fixtures serve for actual use and allow of all sorts of combination lighting.

The newest fitting for the large vase, urn, or pedestal is the indirect lighting arrangement, and it is so lacking in complexity that the "greenest" electrician can fit it up. The accompanying diagram shows the extreme simplicity of the method employed in converting a bowl and a vase into receptacles for indirect lighting fixtures.

Answers to Inquiries.

F. W. M.: The casement and floors need not, necessarily, be alike. For example, your casement may be of mahogany and your floor of oak, and in such case I should advise a little parquetry border of oak and mahogany to drag them together. Curtains alike for the entire house would be in good taste, and the material you mention is excellent for the purpose. Use a light grade of Japanese grass cloth for your whole first floor. A pretty bedroom that I have seen lately had a light gray striped side wall. There was an alcove in this room and the alcove was done in figured paper brilliantly colored. The pattern was a conventionalized one of pomegranate and Chinese looking foliage all outlined with a little border of gray on a white ground.

* *

A. P. R.: I have never seen a home so elaborate that plain muslin curtains did not look well in it. The trend of the fashion nowadays is toward simplification in curtains, as well as other things. Hang your curtains inside the window frames close to the shades and let them extend down to the window sill only. Keep them drawn together when not in actual use, but do not loop or drape them and do not have them ruffled. Hem them at top and bottom and let them fall in straight simple folds. Curtains of this sort are now being used in the homes of many wealthy people. Over draperies of chintz are in high favor now, and will be quite suitable with your furniture as you describe it, and are inexpensive. Plate rails are not being used as much as formerly. A plain molding would be more correct than a plate rail. If you use chintz you will find the color note supplied that you seem to lack. Why not buy Japanese prints? These are decorative and within the means you mention. Perhaps you could passepartout them yourself for the present, and later have them framed with the narrowest ebony beading.

* *

M. A. S.: An amber colored side wall would be fine with a peacock blue rug. Have the rug quite large and in some unobtrusive pattern, showing both lighter and darker shades than the ground. The furniture with this could be in a lighter shade of peacock blue with a tiny line of amber painted near the edge.

* *

A. E.: I would suggest doing the whole home in shades of cream and fawn. If the dining room is dark make it more yellowish than the others. In your cream and white bedroom use a good deal of chintz. Some attractive patterns are shown with touches of white, black, and peacock blue in the pattern. These are brilliant, especially when combined with toilet accessories of a light bright Chinese red.

* *

F. F. T.: When you go to buy your curtains, the kind that draw together, ask for casement curtaining. This comes in white, cream, and a variety of colors. White is preferable. Notice the arrangement of the curtains in the illustration of the dining room in the Nov. 1 issue. English decorators are using for this arrangement old fashioned fabrics in dark colors patterned in contrasting color. They look like old fashioned print or calico—navy blue, for example, with little conventional designs of white or yellow. They are lined to give them weight, and to look better from the outside, with white or a light solid color. Repeat the color of the design in your lamp shades. A new fad is to carry a twelve inch flounce of this lightweight curtaining clear around the room at the top of the side wall. The picture molding is raised to the height of the wall and the flounce is adjusted to it. In your room, as you describe the windows, you could have this valance across the top of your glasses of windows and then continue it on around the room. Touches of the same material may be repeated in pillow coverings for your window seat, or in whatever way you like. I cannot give you the names of dealers, but you will have no difficulty in finding the materials that I speak of in almost any good store carrying dry goods or house furnishings.

* *

Use mulberry silk draw curtains for your small window over the buffet. Place them inside of the window frame near to the glass and keep them drawn back to each side, without tying them, allowing them to hang straight to the sill only. I should prefer your tapestry unbordered. Discard your piano scarf. The material in it may be used for some other purpose. It might be converted into sofa pillows, for example. Repeat the mulberry of your curtains in silk lamp shades or table cover. A deep red for your rug, something even darker than the mulberry in the curtains, would be attractive. While the same material used in the portieres and couch cover could not be called in poor taste, the effect would tend toward monotony; so, unless for some economical advantage, a contrast would be more agreeable.

His First "Real" Suit.

The most embarrassing moment of my life, as well as my father's, came when as a small lad I went with him to the tailor's to be measured for my first "real" suit. The tailor came out with a large cardboard in his hand, but on seeing us, dropped it to the floor. Being a country lad and not used to city ways, I was at a loss to know what to do. Thinking the cardboard was meant for me, I proceeded to stretch out full length upon it, expecting the tailor to mark around my body. My father stood horrified, while the tailor suffered a spell of hysterics. J. F. B.

Then He Had to Explain.

At a wedding supper which took place in our town the bridegroom was called upon for a toast. Before the supper he had pleaded to be excused, but to no avail. In his confusion he awkwardly arose and, placing his hand upon his bride's shoulder, blurted out: "This here has been forced upon me." In the uproar which followed the bridegroom and also the bride must have experienced their most embarrassing moments. M. L. C.

Off Came His Nose.

The most embarrassing moment of my life was when as a young girl I went to call on some complete strangers who had come to our town to live. While waiting for them to come downstairs I stood in front of the mantel looking at a plaster of paris bust of George Washington. In a spirit of mischief I took hold of his nose and said: "I believe I will pull your nose off." Imagine my surprise when the nose really came off in my hand and my chagrin when I looked up to find my hostess standing in the door. N. C.

Amused the Customers.

When I was 16 years old I was employed as an apprentice in one of the local millinery shops, together with quite a few other young girls. At that particular season of the year feather quills were being worn quite extensively, and in a silly mood a few of us girls stuck large feather quills in our hair and called ourselves "Indians." About a half hour later the milliner came to the workroom and asked me to help wait on the trade, to which I readily assented. I was very puzzled at the amused expression on the faces of the customers, and it took me a long time to discover that the cause of their amusement was the crude makeup of an "Indian" which I was still wearing. He Laughed Alone.

My most embarrassing moment was when I was at high school.

We had a teacher who liked to tell jokes and expected us to laugh at his stories. One day when the joke telling teacher, who was somewhat nearsighted, came into the school room B., who was sitting next to me, said: "I was out late last night and I am going to sleep a little. If the teacher tells something very funny wake me up so I can laugh." I promised I would.

The teacher was in a bad humor and instead of telling stories he began asking questions about our last lesson. By chance he called upon my friend B., who by that time was asleep. Remembering my promise, I punched his ribs and he, having the idea it was the signal to laugh, started a deafening uproar of laughter. A. K.

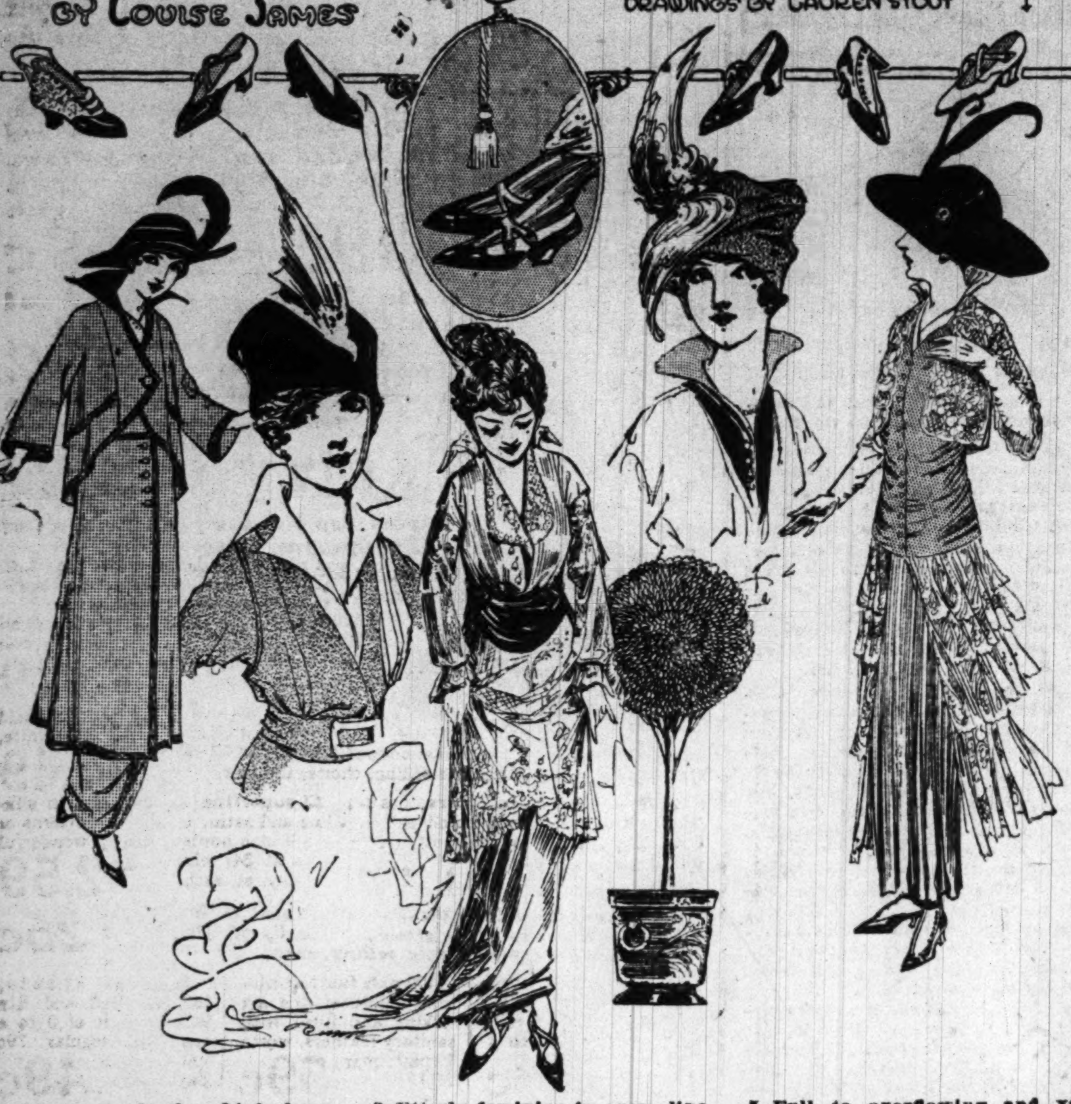
STYLISH SHOES for ALL OCCASIONS

BY LOUISE JAMES

DRAWINGS BY LAUREN STOUT



1. Simplicity is the chief charm of this buff colored street suit with its long, full tunic, button fastened, and its flaring, full, and cuffless jacket. The hat is wide brimmed, velvet covered—a style of millinery which is softening and becoming to the average woman.

2. Chic in the extreme without the aid of too expensive materials, this small tete de negre velvet hat with the champagne colored wing harmonizes pleasingly with the narrow silk bodice and flaring organdie collar.

3. Utterly feminine in every line, this silk and lace frock with its crushed satin girdle and its long, clinging ruffle edged sleeves would make an attractive costume to add to a late winter wardrobe.

4. Still we have the crossover effect, but in millinery this time, not in the bodice line. The hat is small and unique in the arrangement of the winged ornaments.

5. Full to overflowing and yet graceful withal, this lace and velvet frock is charming in its capacity to fill the role both of an afternoon and dinner gown.

1. Newest notes in shoes are glimpsed in this laced gaiter top shoe with its patent leather short vamp and its tete de negre brocaded top.

2. A strapped slipper of dull kid.

3. An all patent leather slipper with toe which inclines to new square effect.

4. A patent leather slipper with suggestion of cloth trimming.

6. Very smart dress boot with gaiter buttoned top, dull kid vamp, which is short.

7. Dancing slipper of white satin with spangled iridescent net. Heel is of the same white satin.

THAT this is preëminently a season for the choice selection of and continuous attention to shoes no one can possibly deny, for are not dress skirts, both for the street and for the house, growing so distressingly short that only the exceptional woman with the tiny foot can be thoroughly happy? And all other women not so fortunately endowed and possessing feet of more generous proportions are finding that the situation demands a most careful and constant effort expended on the footwear they purchase.

Perhaps that is the reason, too, that shoe styles have undergone recently such a succession of changes and new fashion tendencies have appeared more and more frequently. Even in the course of a single week some innovation will make its exit from the great shoe factories and add itself to the shoe style possibilities of the coming months.

I have just come from a visit to one of the biggest factories in the country. I have been taken through their stockrooms and have seen samples of some of the most advanced models—models which have not yet been either advertised or put on the market—but which will make their appearance in a few weeks. They are suggestive of the shoe styles for the late winter and for the early spring.

Of course we all know that cloth tops are continuing popular. Also it is evident they are going to last in favor for some time to come. Women like them. They make the ankle look slender and fit snugly and trimly about the foot. When the sloppy, snowy weather comes there is a likelihood that their popularity may decrease, and then—well, this is a state secret, but there is a dreadful scarcity of leather at the present moment. Indeed, the war conditions have so affected this particular market that there is no telling what will happen if Dame Fashion grows perverse and insists that she will have no more of cloth topped shoes.

One thing is certain as far as styles are concerned, and that is that high heels are coming in. There is no disputing this point. Not in moderation, either. It seems as though the shorter the skirt the higher the heel. And since we are going to have skirts to rise six inches above the ground, the outlook for helels, should they grow reckless to the same degree, does not appear especially encouraging.

In the second place, there is a determined effort being made to bring in the squarer toes. One advance model which I saw, and which has already made its appearance in the Paris shops, had the toe fairly chopped off to the width of an inch. The effect was decidedly bizarre. Imagine the daintiest brocaded slipper, starting out with every appearance of presenting a diminutive, pointed toe, and then having it abruptly end in an inch wide straight line.

Incidentally, mentioning brocades, they are to continue more or less popular, though there is a strong leaning toward the exquisitely fine and perfectly plain materials in the pastel shades. Beads and jet trimmings have now grown too common to last any longer, though iridescent spangles on net and satin are still to be used for evening wear. One adorable little pair of palletted slippers I saw was intended to be worn with a palletted frock and could be made up in any shade. It was of white satin and covered with spangled iridescent net. The spangles were tiny in the extreme—indeed, I doubt if any smaller ones could be procured—and the whole effect was marvelously delicate.

Lace shoes are coming in again. This is another welcome shift in the affairs of fashion, in the eyes of the majority of women. One new idea is that of a laced gaiter top boot with a dull kid vamp—short vamps, by the way, are being worn—and the top of tete de negre brown. The heel is also of the deep brown cloth, but the back portion of the dull kid. Gray tops will continue to be worn, but the fawn shade which was popular for some time is just about out now, and there is every likelihood that in a few weeks or months at the most the color will be quite a thing of the past.

As far as slippers and low shoes are concerned the strapped effects are taking the place of the colonial style. Everywhere in all the expensive models one sees the delicate straps crossing the ankles.

To stray a little from the subject of shoes, in the accompanying illustration I have had two models sketched of the increasingly large hat. For, despite the desperate effort on the part of the small hat to maintain its supremacy unchallenged, the wide brimmed, almost universally becoming large shape is daily endearing itself in feminine hearts. It is certainly queer, the war between hat shapes which has gone on these fall months. At first we were told that we would have only large hats by midwinter. Then when it became obvious what a blatant falsehood that statement was we were told that we would have small hats, of course, buth that the really fashionable hats would be huge. Now we are beginning to realize that this, too, is untrue. The degree of style in a hat does not depend any longer on its size. Lewis, the Paris milliner, is showing in his branch establishment at Biarritz the newest models, and many of them are tiny—the tiniest things imaginable—and many of them are huge, spreading in all directions and shading the face of the wearer almost from view.

Soft felt shapes are popular, too, right now. There is a feminine something about the felt which carries with it an appeal, and when it is bound with a festive bit of ribbon and turned up a little on one side the general effect is delightful. These felts come in all shades, but the pastel shades are the most worn. White felts bordered with ermine and with brim dropping over one ear and held there with a white rose are also effective on young women.

White plush toques are also to be worn this winter, the crown edged about with tiny rosebuds and the general effect suggestive of the commingling of summer and winter. One French trimming which has already made its appearance in New York and which will probably be glimpsed west and south shortly, is that of a conventional flower design which is made up of beaded and palletted tulle. The tulle is prettily shaped into petals and supported on wires that are practically invisible.

Answer to Mother's Jam Puzzle.

Like good Mother Hubbard, we will solve the problem by inspection and prove the quantities in the different jars. Knowing that each shelf contains just twenty quarts, let us begin by canceling off six little jars from the two lower shelves. The result proves that two big jars equal four medium ones, or one large one equals two medium ones. Replace the jars and cancel the two large ones from the middle shelf and equalize the top shelf by removing the large one and two of the medium size. This shows that the one medium sized jar must hold as much as the three little ones. Now multiply all the large jars by two and they are changed to mediums, and multiply the number then representing all the mediums by three to reduce them to the smallest size, and when we add them all together we find that the entire amount could be contained in fifty-four of the small size, eighteen of the medium or nine of the largest. As a large jar would contain one-ninth of sixty quarts, we see that it would hold just six and two-thirds quarts.

"The Girls Considered Me Boss."

Jealousy Among Employes.

A WOMAN I know who has been unusually successful in business told me the other day that up to a month or so ago she had felt superior because she was above petty jealousies, and the discovery that she had flattered herself was a good deal of a shock.

"You cannot imagine," she said, "what a humiliation this disagreeable discovery was to me, as I had always held people who showed jealousy in deep contempt. I realize now why I escaped the 'green eyed monster' for so long, and the knowledge does not increase my self-esteem.

"I have never worked for any firm but the one I am with now. When I started to work about eight years ago I was the only girl employed by the company. After a time as the work got heavier another girl was engaged, and as the men all called her my assistant I came to regard myself as her superior officer. Later the office force was increased and several other girls were engaged. The manager asked me to teach them the work, and when he had instructions to give them gave them through me. For that reason the girls considered me their 'boss.'

"The chance discovery that two or three of the girls resented my being over them was a great surprise, as I thought I had given them no reason to be antagonistic toward me. I said to myself, 'They are just jealous.'

"I have always been well content with my advancement. I have gone steadily upward and apparently without interfering with the chances of other people. My position became better as the firm enlarged, and no woman went beyond me or even came up to me.

"Not long ago a young man came to the president of the firm to apply for a position. We all knew the reason for the young man's call, and one of the men jokingly asked me if I wasn't afraid of my position, as the young man seemed to be looking for a job similar to mine.

"To my astonishment this remark made in fun and with no intention of worrying me caused me a great deal of anxiety. I knew the applicant had been given some encouragement, as I heard him say as he was leaving that he would be back in a few days. Until I knew definitely that the young man had been hired to take charge of another department I had little rest from worry. For the first time in my business career I was afraid about my position.

"Although the newcommer was an extremely agreeable young man and made a good impression on everybody else, I felt the keenest dislike to him, and I think I would have been glad if he had not made good. When he had occasion to speak to me about business I was downright horrid to him. Fortunately for my own peace of mind I have overcome my feeling of jealousy and am heartily ashamed of myself. I sincerely hope that I will never again be foolish enough to make myself so miserable without any cause and to allow my jealousy to vent itself on a business associate who has done nothing to cause it."

Judging from the letters from business girls this is not an uncommon case. One girl writes that the thought of the promotion she is in line for gives her little pleasure, as she knows it will cause hard feeling among some of the girls in the office, even though they know she is entitled to it. She says there are two or three girls in the office with her who do nothing to merit promotions for themselves, and when any one of their number is given a better position or an increase in salary these jealous ones can lose no opportunity to make slighting remarks about their more fortunate associates.

Another girl writes of an interesting case, though an extreme one, I believe. Her letter follows:

"I work under a woman who everybody says is engaged to be married to the president of our company. When I started to work I was warned by the girl who was in the office before I came that I must not speak to the president except when absolutely necessary. Miss R., I was told, is so jealous that she cannot bear to have a girl speak to him. My predecessor was dismissed because Miss R. came into the office one day and found them laughing over a ludicrous mistake somebody in the office had made. The girl was let out the next day without an explanation. I suppose some day I will forget and smile at him when he says good morning to me and I will be without a position.

"I was so impressed by the warning that I am afraid to speak to the man even when he asks me a question. The other day when I was coming back from lunch I found, to my dismay, that I would have to ride up in the elevator with him, and I was really worried. It probably sounds awfully silly, but it is a fact that I am afraid of Miss R.'s jealousy. When I come to work in the morning I have the feeling that I may not last out the day and, consequently, am decidedly uncomfortable most of the time. If it weren't for my fear of arousing Miss R.'s jealousy I would be happy in my position. The uncertainty of it is rather wearing."

One can hardly envy this girl her position under the jealous Miss R., but I wonder who is made the more uncomfortable, Miss R. herself or the girl under her? It seems to me that a woman who is so unreasonably jealous that she is suspicious of every one around her must be unhappy most of the time.

The Queerest Man I Ever Worked For.

Many business girls have had queer employers at some time or other during their business careers and some of these men have the most unexpected eccentricities. Those of us who have been in business life for many years probably know a number of such queer characters. "The Sunday Tribune" will pay $1 for each letter published on the subject of "The Queerest Man I Ever Worked For." Address letters to Miss Mary King, "Sunday Tribune," Chicago.

Had Twenty Clocks.

The queerest man I ever worked for was a man who seemed crazy on the subject of clocks. His offices consisted of three rooms, and there were about twenty clocks of all styles, sizes, and dimensions scattered through them.

He was rather a "tight wad" in most things, but generous when it came to timekeepers, as he invariably presented a clock to any employé who won his favor.

He would stand in front of a certain grandfather's clock for sometimes half an hour, apparently lost in admiration. I ventured to ask him one day, jokingly, as to what the clock said, and was astonished when he turned and said, very gravely, "My dear young lady, it speaks a language you do not comprehend."

He Had the Letter

The queerest man I ever worked for was a man that had absolutely no memory. He would put things away and then ask me where they were. Every day I got a scolding for not knowing where he put the most important letters.

One day after writing a letter he had dictated to me I handed it to him. He looked at it and without thinking simply put his hand behind his back. In a minute he asked me for the letter. I said I had given it to him, but he said I didn't. He got into a range and ordered me to quit at once.

I put on my hat and was about to leave when I spied the letter in his hand. After calling his attention to it he kept me.

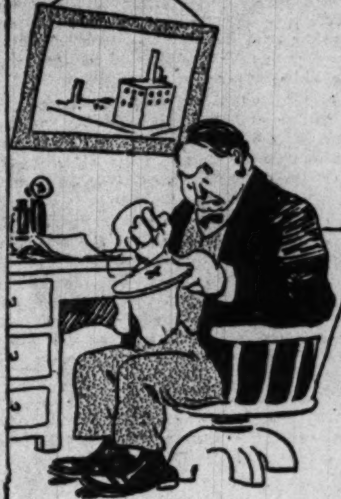
He Learned Tatting.

Without a doubt the queerest man I ever worked for was the manager of a large steel and iron works. This man had a bunch of well trained foremen, so that the manager had very little to do. As the stenographic work in his office was not heavy I fell into the habit of picking up a piece of crocheting or some kind of fancy work when I was not busy taking dictation of typing.

One day I was busy working on a large crocheted center piece that I had just about finished when Mr. B., the manager, came over to where I was sitting. I at once laid the work to one side and picked up my note book, expecting to take some dictation. You can imagine my surprise when Mr. B. said, "No, no; don't stop your work. I have nothing now; instead I came over to watch you work. Do you know, that kind of work sort of fascinates me and I have half a notion to try to get on to the loops and twists you make. Now, how do you go at it to begin?"



I got another hook, a larger one, and some thread, and gave him his first lesson then. Between that time and the time I left his employment Mr. B. had mastered every stitch in crocheting I knew, was able to embroider, and had taken up tatting. And he worked on these, too, for on one occasion I have known him to keep a president of a western railroad waiting half an hour until he "got on" to the construction of a picot.

Kept Notes on His Cuffs.

The queerest man I ever worked for was one who, when he made an important engagement, received any considerable amount of money, read an especially interesting piece of news, or signed a legal document, wrote a notation on his shirt cuff. When his left cuff became full he removed it, put on a clean one, and had the old one wrapped up and placed in the files.

Sometimes he took them home. The safekeeper told me that there were a few in the safe. They were the ones with notes of great importance on them. It afforded every one in the office a great deal of amusement when, one time, while he was dictating to me, and received an important phone call, he asked me if there was a clean place on his cuff, and I stared at him as though I thought he was either joking or going insane. I was assured that he really meant it.

He was such a neat man in every other particular that I had often wondered why there was such a crease about four or five inches up on his left coat sleeve. I understood why when I learned how he kept notes, for he turned back the end of his sleeve so that he could write.

Didn't Want a Dude.

Being of the opinion that neatness is quite a factor in applying for a job I dressed myself in my "Sunday best" and made application to the division superintendent of a railroad who proved to be a very gruff old man. I removed my hat, showing my perfectly parted sleek hair. He looked at me and then informed me that I was too much of a dude and that any fellow who parted his hair in the middle could not work for him. I made a hasty exit, returned to my room and from the bottom of my trunk brought forth a pair of overalls, a jumper, and an old cap. I donned these, mussed up my hair, and in less than an hour was again ushered into the presence of "his gruffness" applying for the same job and I got it. To this day the queerest man I ever worked for does not know that dude and I were the same person.

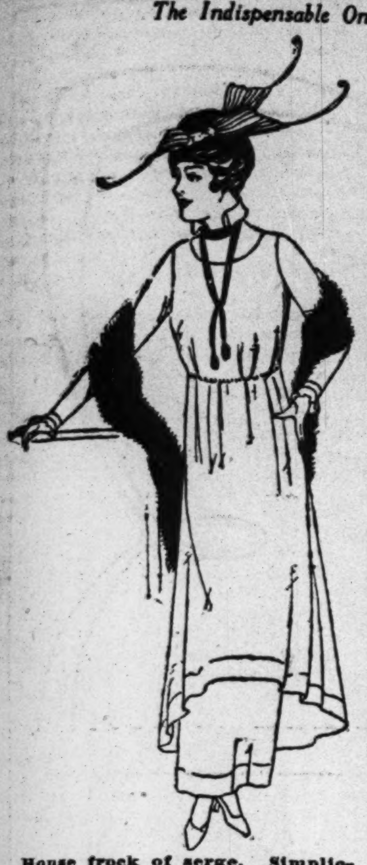
Jane Barton The Home Dressmaker

The Indispensable One Piece Utility Frock.



House frock of serge. Simplicity in the extreme marks this dress, which presents at the same time the latest fashion notes. Modishness is seen in the full tunic, the long, narrow sleeve, the tight bodice, the beltless skirt.

WHETHER one is in business or spends most of her day at home, nothing quite takes the place of the one piece utility frock. It is easily made, easily kept in good condition, and easily put on, an important consideration to a busy worker or housewife.

Do not pay too much for your materials—I would much rather have two frocks of moderate cost. For a dollar a yard one can get an excellent smooth serge, wool poplin, gabardine, or some of the novelty mixtures, generally measuring forty inches wide. There are plenty of 75 cent serges and novelties that wear well, while a good 50 or 60 cent challis makes one of the nicest dresses of this kind, especially for the woman who is indoors most of the time, or who must sit in a hot office.

Whatever is chosen, the material must be sponged to keep it spotproof and scrubable. Just in passing let me advise every woman to keep a bottle of alcohol and a small sponge or piece of dark silk on her dressing table to rub off any spot as it appears, also to remove shine from both wool and silk materials.

If cost is not an item nothing makes a better one-piece frock made on simple tailored lines suitable for utility wear than a good quality of crêpe de chene. This will cost you from $1.50 to $2 a yard and from five to six yards should make one of the new model styles with the flaring plain skirt. If plaits are used more material will be needed, but that is easily decided when the pattern is bought.

One advantage of crêpe de chene for the separate blouse or one-piece frock is that it can be actually washed in the tub; another that it is dressy enough for afternoon wear or a table or two of bridge. Naturally for cold weather one will have to wear this with a full length coat or tights, so for the office girl I should advise serge, gabardine, or something heavier than the crêpe. It is for a separate blouse, however, always my first choice.

Be careful in your choice of a pattern to get smart lines, then one need not go to the extra expense and work of trimmings. Stitching buttons, which are a favorite trimming, and tucks or plaits both on skirts and blouse are all that are necessary, save perhaps a girdle of satin and a detachable collar and cuffs of satin. If these last are made to button on they are much less fussy to adjust than if basted in and afford variety to a simple gown by having several sets of different colors and materials.

If you wish trimming, velvet ribbons in narrower widths, braid, or applied folds of satin in self or contrasting tones are better than pipings which require to almost tear a dress apart when the piping wears.

If you have a good shirtwaist pattern it may be adapted to any of the new one-piece frocks and will be more quickly made up than a new model whose lines may not be correct. Remember that long sleeves are essential for this type of dress. The neck may be buttoned right to the throat with a high collar, or if you are wedded to the open neck the lines are much higher, the V being little below the base of the throat, not more than two inches, and narrow.

Either of the following blouses may be joined to one of the new skirts. For the first lay a box plait two and a half inches wide down the center of the width that is to be used for the back, then cut out as usual. Cut the fronts plain to fit without fullness at the shoulder. If but one row of buttons is used make it single breasted, lapping about three-quarters of an inch in the regulation way. Cut the neck in the shallow V as described. For two rows of buttons have the front edges just meet, hooking together. Set the hooks about an eighth of an inch from the right edge to prevent gaping and have the eyes barely project beyond the left edge. Set a flap of the material under the eyes to project an inch so the lining does not show.

While these one piece frocks may be unlined, I should advise a French lining of satine or percaline, or even a heavy lawn if you are warm blooded. This keeps the blouse in better shape and prevents that ugly pulling away at the back of the neck that is hard to overcome in the unlined waist. This lining is made and fitted first, hooking up the front. The outside may be made with it in the shoulder or under arm seams, or it can be merely connected at the throat, armholes, and belt.

Face back the neck opening an inch and on the under side sew tiny buttons or clamps with buttonholes or sockets to correspond on yokes and collars. With this treatment one can quickly adjust the collar and yoke, which may be of satin, corded silk, pique, or lingerie materials as desired, and one can have both high and open throat effects to adapt the dress to street or house wear. Remember, the newest collars do not flare away as much as they did, but fit closely to the back of the neck, even when open an inch and a half or two inches in front.

The one piece long sleeves are set in without fullness and may be finished at the hand with a turnback, slightly flaring cuff, or can be cut to flare slightly over the hand, be slashed at the back an inch and a half, and trimmed with a row of buttons above the slash. Another finish is a two inch straight band stitched three-quarters of an inch from the edge and from the joining line. This can be supplied with buttons or sockets on the under side that cuffs can be buttoned on.

When the double rows of buttons are used they are set on the outside, with or without simulated buttonholes. A novel effect is to have silk or velvet covered buttons to match the material, using a small round mold and a rather larger oval one alternately. This button trimming can also be set on the front edges of the yoke or on both front and back.

Another blouse may have the back plain or with three lengthwise three-quarter inch tucks on each side of the center, turning to the outside and stitched on the outer edge to give a flat effect. The fronts are plain on the shoulders and are cut away to show a vest of the material from tip of collar to girdle.

The high collar has a two or two and a half inch opening in the center front, which may be open or can have the vest extend to top of collar.

The vest may be just the width of the neck opening from collar to waist, or the outsides can be sloped from this width to five or six inches apart at the girdle. The edges of collar and fronts and outside of sleeves may be stitched three-quarters of an inch in and trimmed with quarter inch bone, velvet, or silk buttons, set their own width apart.

Our Annual Coat Sale—Beyond Question the Event of the Season—$25 to $30 Values, $14.75

You know it is our invariable rule to understate, rather than overstate, values in an ad, and when we say these are $25 to $30 coats at $14.75 you can rest assured this statement is fully justified by the garments themselves. In order to reach the standard of former coat sales at this period of the year, we simply had to provide unquestioned bargains—and we have succeeded with more than our accustomed efficiency.

The garments involved are of the highest quality of fabric and workmanship—the product of New York's best coat makers. Every coat is one of the season's newest styles and there is broad variety to please all.

SECOND FLOOR.

Detailed description of the many styles and fabrics is impossible and, we are sure, unnecessary. Enough to say that you may select from coats of imported silk velours, imported broadcloth, sealette plushes, Hindu lynx, broadtail pomorie, Arabian lamb, Matalam, and a great variety of other novelty cloakings in new color effects. Many of the coats are finished with fur collars and cuffs, while the linings are of the finest quality. Many are sample coats, only one of a style; others in a full size range.

Jane Barton's Sewing Queries.

RUTH P. M.: You will find a black satin or moire girdle excellent to remodel your last season frocks and give the modern deep loose line. Why not buy a pattern giving several variations of these new girdles? They come in small, medium, and large size. A yard and a quarter of forty-four inch material will make a deep draped girdle, lapped to the left side, and finished in two loops and an end. Have the top loop five inches, the one beneath it seven inches, and the end twelve inches. These have a long knot holding them at the top. Fasten with hooks and eyes and a bone or tape at the sides to keep the girdle from crushing too much together.

* *

MISS BLONDIE: With your fair skin, faint rose tints, rather pale blue eyes, and flaxen hair you can wear most colors, but must be careful not to choose tones that will make you look washed out. This is often the case with certain shades of baby blue, so much worn by your type. Strong tones of red, orange, cold gray, and tans should be avoided. Black, dead white, most shades of blue, save the pale, rich garnet, dark brown, and most of the pinkish purple and violet shades, with soft rose pinks, will all be becoming. Yellow must be handled carefully, though you can use a soft canary tone.

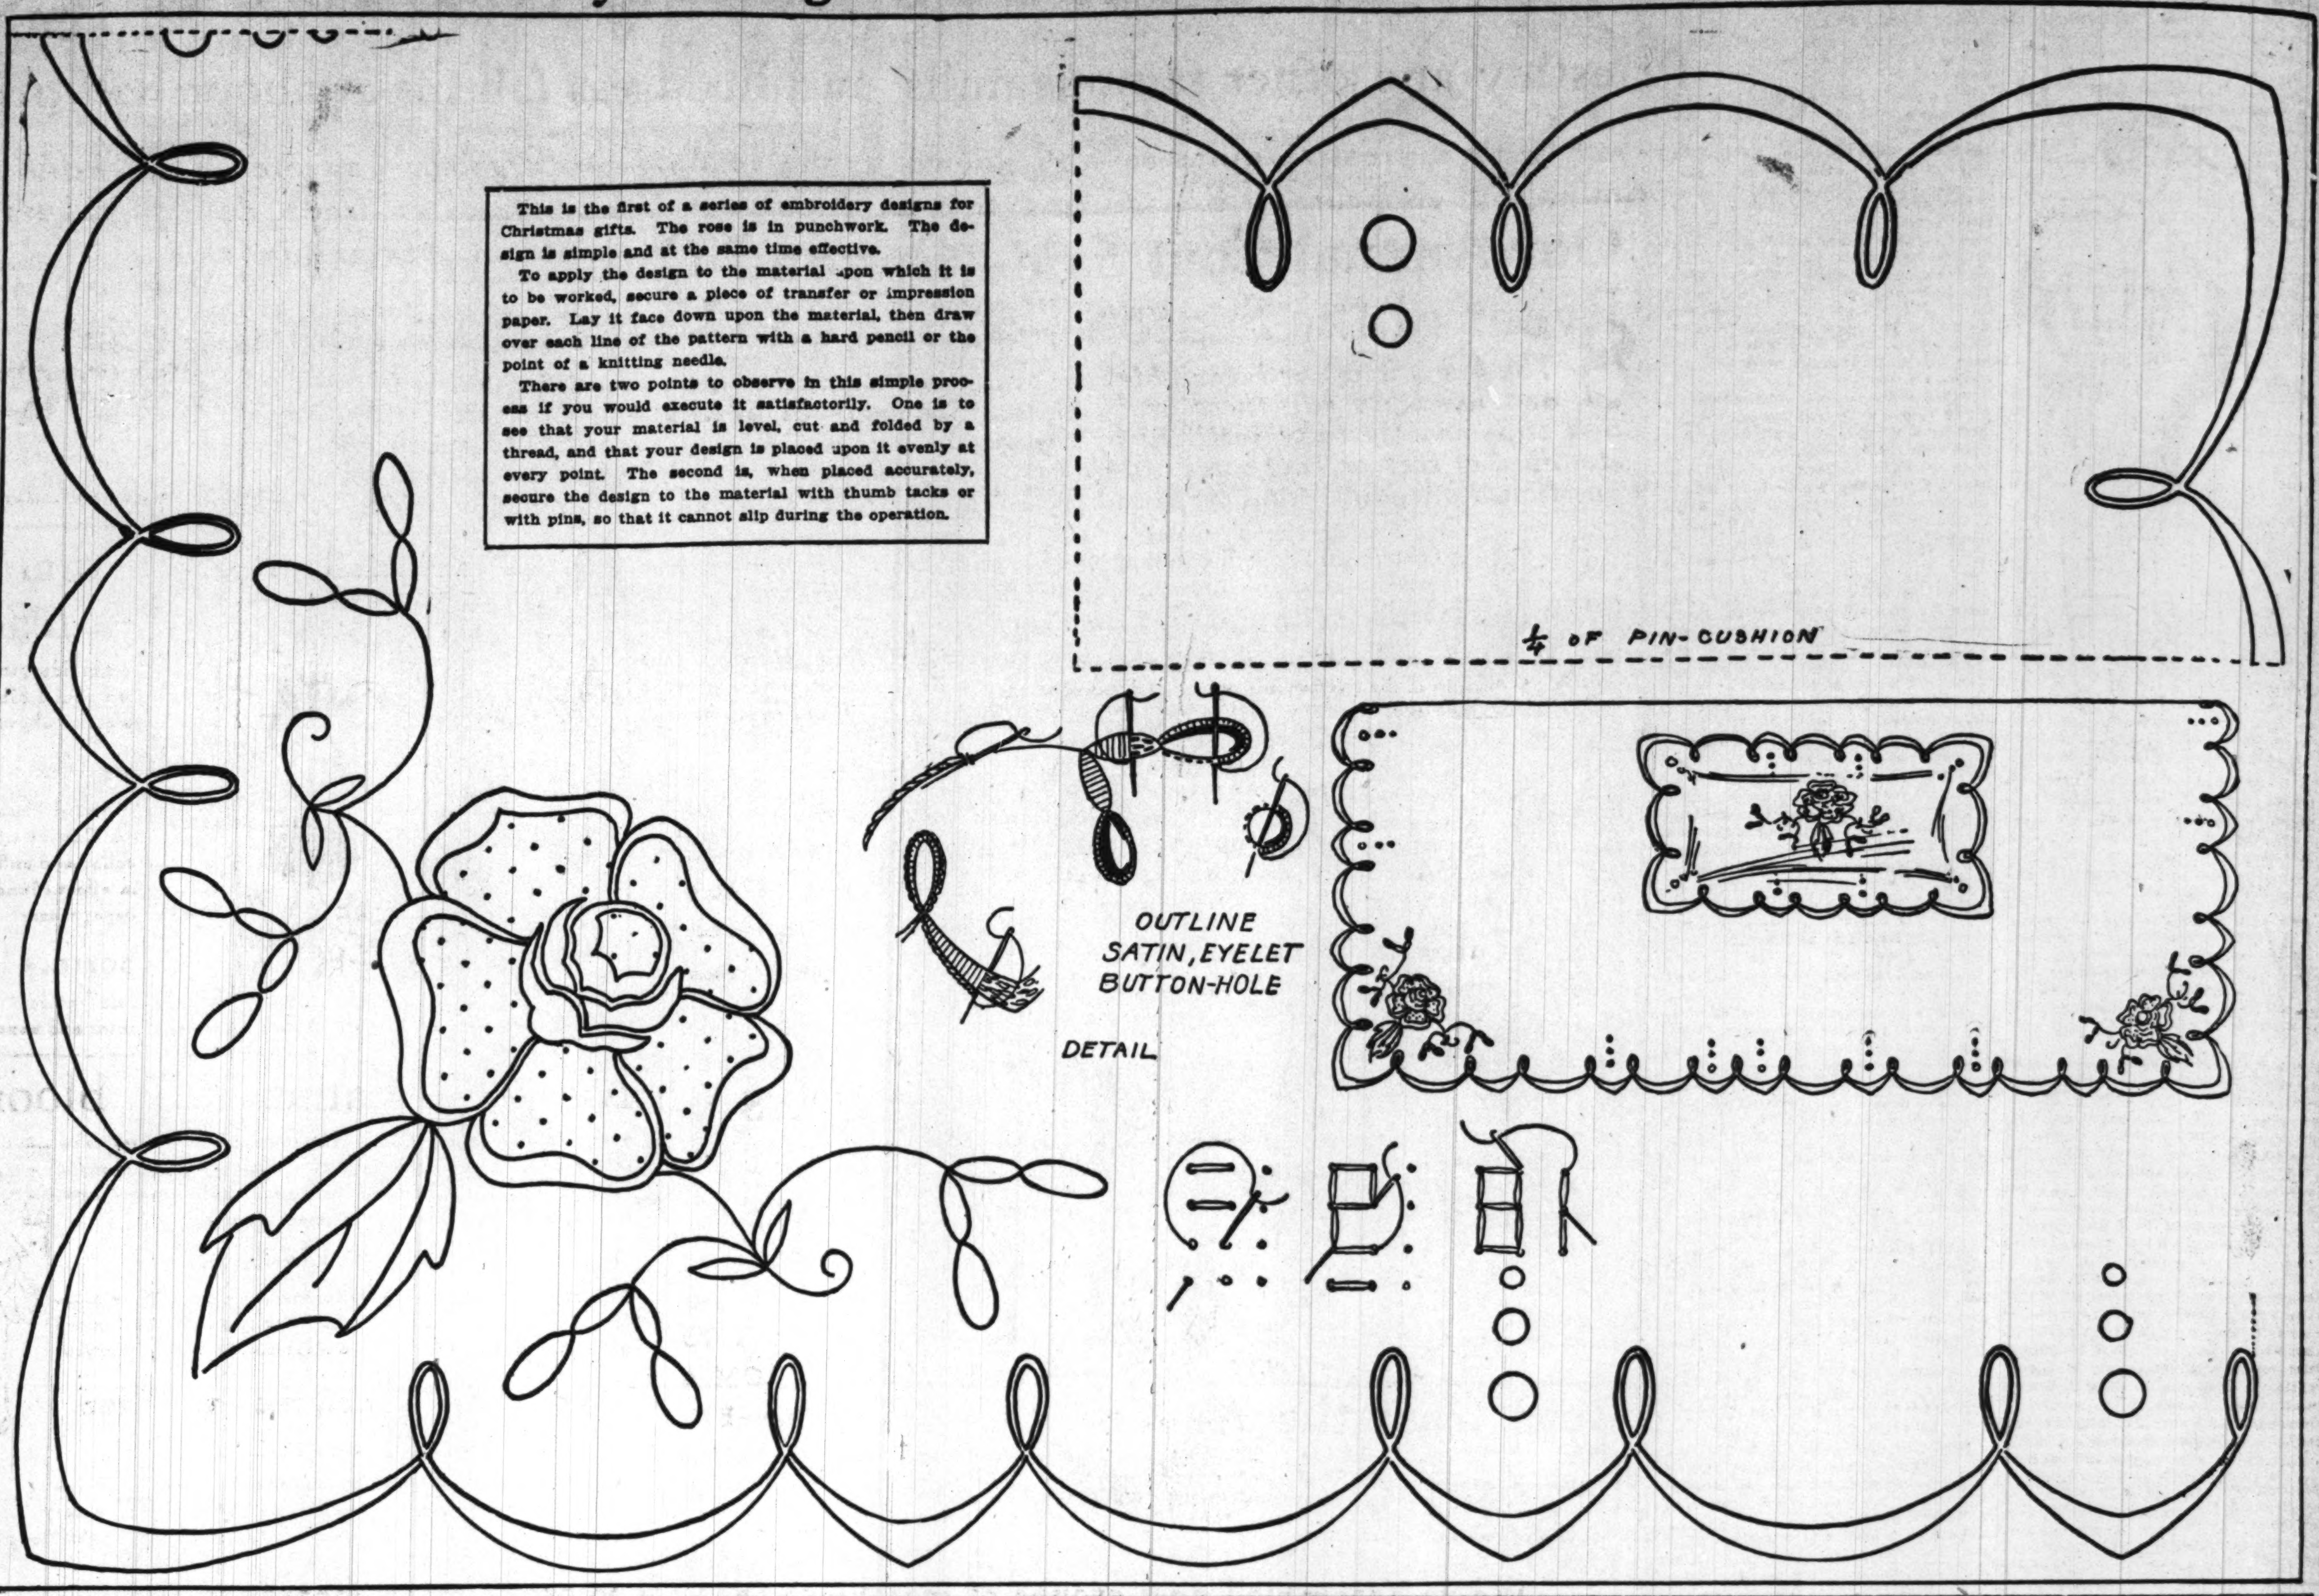
* *

ESTELLE: Yes, indeed, you can remodel your dark geen suit with the peg top skirt. The short flaring coat is still good, but as the collar is worn replace with a rolled collar of black moire. Make a foundation skirt of black percaline with a front panel and six or seven inches around the bottom of the moire. Cut over a two piece circular flare. As the seams of your peg top are not cut, rip carefully, turn the skirt upside down, cut open the center front, letting the moire show in a strip two or two and a half inches wide. Lay the cloth in a box plait at the back and let it fall almost to the edge of the moire. Slope slightly toward the fronts, but do not round the edges, as it is newer for these tunics to fall in straight lines with the squared corners. Use your chiffon blouse just as it is, but start two bias strips of the moire, one from each shoulder, crossing in front and looping at back into girdle ends. Use two stitched points of the cloth on the back of the blouse, two on the front, one on each side of the moire. Make flare cuffs of the cloth with a band of moire on the upper edge. One of the high, close turn over collars of the moire is sewed to the back of the neck and the V opening in front is filled with an embroidered net or lace with one of the new close collars of lace falling over the black collar. With this treatment your old suit will make you a stylish, "dressy" costume.

* *

ESTELLE: I prefer lingerie underwear to either the silk or crêpe. That is merely an individual preference. If washed in cold water both crêpe de chine and a nice quality of china silk should wash well without yellowing unduly. The crêpe de chine petticoats, however, are much more desirable than the lingerie ones. You might scallop the bottom edge in deep, oval scallops and use lace ruffles beneath for under the evening frock.

Embroidery Design for Dresser Scarf and Pin Cushion.



This is the first of a series of embroidery designs for Christmas gifts. The rose is in punchwork. The design is simple and at the same time effective.

To apply the design to the material upon which it is to be worked, secure a piece of transfer or impression paper. Lay it face down upon the material, then draw over each line of the pattern with a hard pencil or the point of a knitting needle.

There are two points to observe in this simple process if you would execute it satisfactorily. One is to see that your material is level, cut and folded by a thread, and that your design is placed upon it evenly at every point. The second is, when placed accurately, secure the design to the material with thumb tacks or with pins, so that it cannot slip during the operation.

The TRIBUNE COOK BOOK

EDITED BY JANE EDDINGTON

Jane Eddington's articles are printed every day in "The Daily Tribune."

AMONG our grandmother's precious stores was almost always to be found the preserved citron, and a half century ago candied citron was considered one of the essential constituents of fruit cakes of almost every sort, of a citron cake (usually a pound cake), and of several sorts of fruit puddings. It was also used for decorating cakes, and a bit of it was often put in the center of the top of sugar cookies.

Why the preserving melon should be called a citron is a mystery, since in world usage citron is the name of a tree, the tree on which grow some one of the citrous fruits—orange, lemon, lime, or grapefruit. The English use the term in a conflicting way, calling a lemon sauce a citron sauce, but even in the days of Mrs. Glasse melon citron was candied.

Those who are probably the most careful to speak correctly about such things today say "citron melon," which is so much like the watermelon in fundamental character that another name for it is "preserving watermelon." Its quality is not like that of the watermelon, but its white heart, tougher or less spongy than that of the watermelon, has much the same flavor when raw.

This melon will keep all winter without any particular care, and fresh preserves can be made of it at any time. These preserves are not unlike those made from the casaba melon, which, being as yet a novelty, costs from 30 to 50 cents apiece here, while citron melons of equal size have cost this season from 5 to 8 cents, if you bought them in the right place. Some stores, however, have charged three times this, but the low price has been quite general.

The citron preserve is, among preserves, what the bonbon is among candies. It is clear, shining, and handsome and of delicate flavor, but borders on that type of sweetness called "sickish." The candied citron has not generally been used as a confection, though if rightly made—long process—it might be, but pieces of the preserved citron rolled in sugar make a dainty confection. To candy the citron so that it will keep is usually accomplished by dipping it over and over again in a thick sirup and drying it after each dripping, but there are other ways.

A glance through some of the cook books of even twenty years ago will show how much candied citron was used in wedding cakes, in "a magnificent Christmas cake" in "a fine bride's cake," in plum cake, in loaf cake, and in the patriotic cakes mostly originating in New England, such as election cake, independence cake, "New Haven commencement cake," etc. Instead of candied citron preserved citron was drained from the sirup and used. Rolled in sugar and then in flour, it can well serve.

Miss Leslie in her book (1852) gives two pages to "American citron" and still another to "preserved citron melons"—the same thing—finally saying: "This will be found a delicious sweetmeat, equal to any imported from the West Indies and far less expensive." Jennie June says of a candied citron prepared at home, "It is nearly as nice as bought citron." In our day it is much nicer.

Simplest Preserved Citron.

The simplest and most wholesome citron preserve, though perhaps not the one which will keep the longest, is made as follows: Cut the melon into quarters, cut out the seedy part, and then cut the rind into nice square or oblong pieces. Pour double the amount of boiling water over these pieces that it will take to cover them unless the quantity is large, and then water to cover may be sufficient, and boil gently until the melon becomes clear. The water is almost sure to boil away a half, and it is better to have enough left for the sirup. Make a sirup of this water and as many pints of sugar as there are pints of the cooked melon. It will do no harm if there is as much of the water as there is sugar, but less is commonly used. The sirup must be cooked up and carefully skimmed, as a dark scum disfigures this preserve. When the sirup is ready put in the melon and simmer for fifty minutes. Seal like any preserve.

Other Methods of Making.

Many people cut up the citron, sprinkle it lightly with salt, cover it with water, and let it stand over night. They then drain off this water and let it soak in clear water, then cook it in water only until it is transparent. Finally a sirup is made, highly seasoned with lemon or ginger root, or both, and the citron cooked in that. But Miss Leslie in her day said "steeping sweetmeats in brine is now obsolete." Yet she used alum to stiffen the melon, as most people today, although our pure food laws do not allow manufacturers to use it, and no one will use it who cares more for health than for a handsome preserve. It is handsome enough without the alum.

In cooking the melon, which has been soaked in brine, there is a time when it puffs up, and it is probably at this point when the professional makers would do something to keep it puffed, but it quickly collapses unless given special treatment. The rather coarse candied citron of commerce is usually in quarters, and when it is to be candied at home it need be cut no smaller, although the large pieces are harder to manage.

Preparing Citron for Cake.

Jennie June in her recipe for preserved citron uses alum, but in her recipe with the above title she omits it. In both cases she uses soda, which is unusual. Her recipe reads: "Boil the citron in soda water until it is clear or tender, have ready a nice sirup of sugar, put in the citron, and boil until the sugar has struck through it; take it out on plates to dry slowly, sprinkle pulverized sugar on both sides, two or three times until it is dried enough. Then pack in wooden boxes, with sugar between the layers."

Citron Cake.

The old citron cakes are too expensive for us, since a pound of butter and from six to ten eggs were used. The pound cakes had at least a half pound of butter, and generally a pound. But we can use citron in any simple cake recipe, flouring it, and if with raisins and currants, when a cup each of these is used, have but a half cup of the finely chopped citron. In the pound cake long thin strips of the citron have been considered attractive. A three egg cake, three-fourths cup of sifted sugar, half a cup of butter or margarine, and three cups of flour and a cup of milk or two cups of flour and a half cup of milk make a not too expensive foundation for a fruit cake. It is all right to beat the whites and yolks of the egg separately, but to add the whites before the fruit, yet a method much followed today is to rub the flour and butter together and then stir the fruit into this to save flouring it, then the egg and liquid, and finally the flour a little at a time.

Marion Harland's Helping Hand

By Marion Harland

Marion Harland's Helping Hand Corner appears every day in "The Daily Tribune."

"THIS is the first time I have appeared in the Corner, of which I have been a constant and interested reader. Besides the addresses for which I ask I have other helps to pass on. 'Reader' can remove the gum from her carpet with benzine or with the cleaning compound for which I send a formula. This will take grease spots from any kind of goods without injury. Can any one send me bulbs of the large leaf ornamental plant called elephants' ear? I can send in return cuttings of roses or various other things if I am told what is wanted. Here is the formula for the cleaning compound: One pint of benzine, three drams of alcohol, three drams of chloroform, two drams of sulphuric ether. Keep tightly corked and do not use near a fire. MRS. K. K."

You have certainly won your welcome on your first appearance and I hope you may come often again. The addresses you asked have been sent you by post, but I am sorry to say that of Mrs. M. M. is not in my possession. I regret this the more because of other requests for it, as well as various letters which have come dealing with her case.

To Brighten a Sick Home.

"I am going to ask the dear friends of the Corner if they can help to brighten a sick home by sending some flower seeds and bulbs. I am a young girl with the care of my grandparents, and as they must live in the mountains I get lonely sometimes and homesick as well. We have plenty of water and good soil here, so I could grow flowers and they would be such a joy to my grandmother and to me, too. We are too poor to buy bulbs, yet those are the kind of flowers she loves. Some miners said to me the other day: 'Little girl, why don't you write to the Helping Hand Corner in the paper and ask some of the good women who read it to send you a few bulbs and seeds?' So they gave me several copies of the paper. I cannot tell you how I would thank you for any kind of flowers you might send. We so love narcissus and jonquils and Chinese sacred lily, or anything else of the kind. I only wish I could offer something in return, but I cannot think of anything now but my thanks. "M. L. G."

This letter, I am sure, will meet with a speedy reply from our readers. The picture will present itself to them as it does to me of the young girl and the old people; the sympathetic miners who wish to do their share in cheering the homesick child and who suggest the help of the Cornerites. Such an appeal is never made in vain to our generous readers, and I look for early calls for the address of M. L. G.

Good Home for Good Dog.

"I want to thank you for putting in my request for embroidery and lace. I have received many packages of beautiful lace and embroidery, besides other useful things for my wee girlies. I have thanked all the good friends by letter except one or two who put no address on their packages, so that I had no way of knowing to whom to write. I trust they may see this, so that they may know how I appreciate their kindness. My husband wishes to ask for a good dog to help drive cattle, as he is not able to buy one, but could give one a good home, and I can say the dog would have a good, kind master. So if any one has a dog for which he wishes to find a good home—a good cattle dog—here is the chance. We wish one with a kind disposition towards children. "MRS. D. D. B."

It delights me to learn of the generous response to Mrs. D. D. B.'s request for laces and embroidery with which to trim the frocks of her little girls, and I hope the dog to which she offers a home may make an early appearance. It is a good chance for some one who has a dog for whom a kind master and a pleasant home are desired.

Varnish Stain on Voile.

"Can you please tell me what to use to remove varnish stain from a black and white voile dress? I send a splendid cake recipe to use when eggs are scarce: One cup of granulated sugar, one tablespoon of shortening, either lard and butter or good dripping and butter mixed; one cup of sour milk to which has been added one level teaspoon of soda, two cups of flour, using part of it to dredge one cup of raisins or currants; half a teaspoon of cinnamon and nutmeg, a pinch of salt. Bake for about thirty-five minutes in a stem cake pan in a moderate oven. "MRS. H. A. S."

Try turpentine on the varnish stain, and if this does not help why not experiment with the cleaning fluid recommended by Mrs. K. K. in the letter given above? Be sure to bear in mind her caution to use it in a room without a fire.

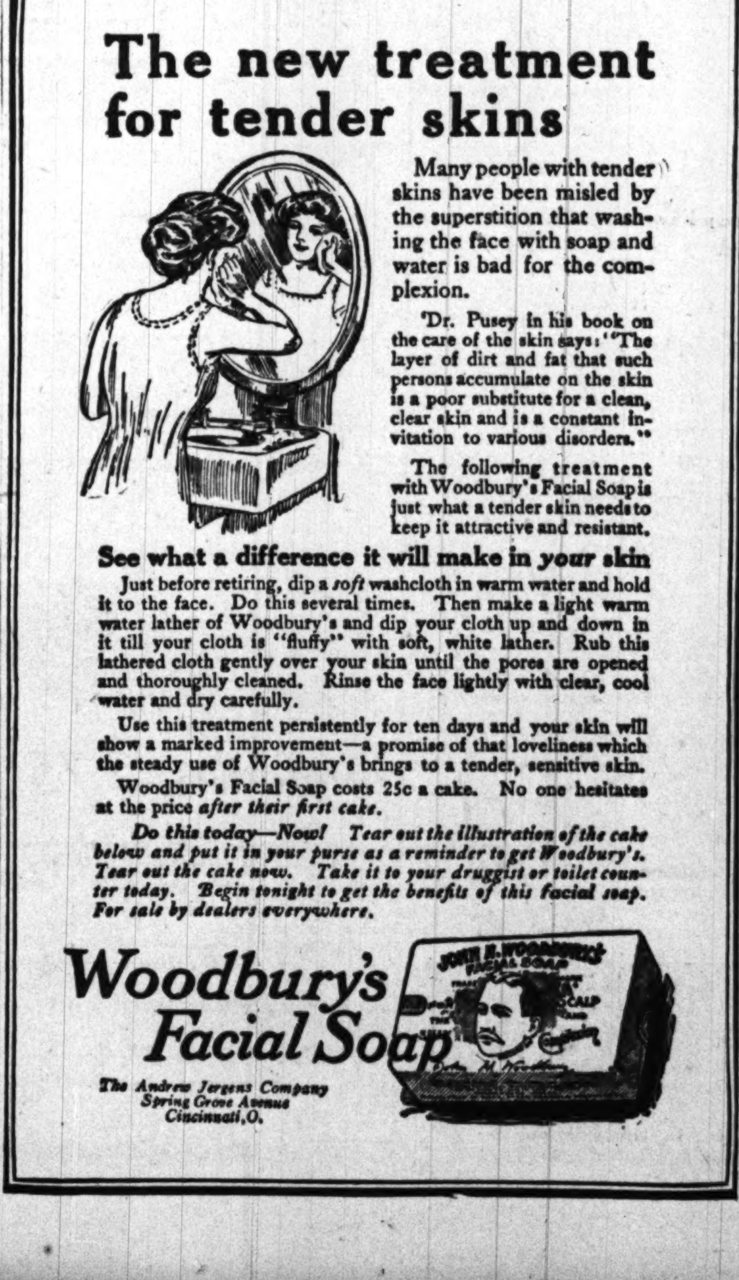
Lived on Raw Food.

"About two years ago you mentioned a Mrs. F. M. G., who lived wholly upon raw food. I would like very much to correspond with her upon her regimen of diet. If you have her address I would be glad to receive it. F. M."

With the hundreds of letters which come to us weekly it is impossible to keep addresses after such a lapse of time as this. Should this letter meet the eye of Mrs. F. M. G. I shall be glad to hear from her and to put her in touch with F. M.



The new treatment for tender skins

Many people with tender skins have been misled by the superstition that washing the face with soap and water is bad for the complexion.

Dr. Pusey in his book on the care of the skin says: "The layer of dirt and fat that such persons accumulate on the skin is a poor substitute for a clean, clear skin and is a constant invitation to various disorders."

See what a difference it will make in your skin

Just before retiring, dip a soft washcloth in warm water and hold it to the face. Do this several times. Then make a light warm water lather of Woodbury's and dip your cloth up and down in it till your cloth is "fluffy" with soft, white lather. Rub this lathered cloth gently over your skin until the pores are opened and thoroughly cleaned. Rinse the face lightly with clear, cool water and dry carefully.

Use this treatment persistently for ten days and your skin will show a marked improvement—a promise of that loveliness which the steady use of Woodbury's brings to a tender, sensitive skin.

Woodbury's Facial Soap costs 25c a cake. No one hesitates at the price after their first cake.

Do this today—Now! Tear out the illustration of the cake below and put it in your purse as a reminder to get Woodbury's. Tear out the cake now. Take it to your druggist or toilet counter today. Begin tonight to get the benefits of this facial soap. For sale by dealers everywhere.

My neighbor's son, age 4 years, went home from kindergarten with a boy who lived across the street car tracks, from which crossing he had been warned and threatened with punishment. Being alarmed at his not coming home, his mother went in search of him and met him returning, very much excited. He said, "The mobiles and cars didn't get me. See, there's nothing broke off of me; here's my arms and here's my legs." C. C. D.

Battles in the Sky

Shelling one of the Allies' aeroplanes.

Mr. McCutcheon has just returned from two months spent in the war zone of Europe. The drawings accompanying this story were made from personal observations during the battle of the Aisne.

Another story by Mr. McCutcheon, which tells of his flight over a battlefield, will appear, accompanied by McCutcheon drawings, in next Sunday's "Tribune."

[Copyright: 1914: By John T. McCutcheon.]

NOT far from the German front south of Laon is a strangely shaped military observation balloon. It looks something like a huge peanut one end of which is much enlarged, and from it hangs a basket in which an observer sits hour after hour high in the heavens with a telephone at his side.

From his lofty perch the observer watches the enemy's position for any unusual movement of troops and also telephones down to the German batteries how their shells are falling. His is an important duty, and a dangerous one as well, for the allies' flyers are constantly seeking to explode his balloon.

A short time before I was there a balloon had been hit by a bomb dropped from above and destroyed, together with the observer. In consequence, whenever one of the enemy's flyers now appears he is immediately the focal point about which the shells from the balloon guns explode.

On my way to the front, about three miles beyond, I stopped at the balloon field, which is not very far in a certain direction from where the general of that particular army corps has his field headquarters.

A broad valley, broken by patches of woodland, lies ahead, and on the opposite rim of the valley are a number of batteries, screened by artificial vegetation and straw so effectively that a flyer 6,000 or 8,000 feet above could not detect their locations. Beyond this rim of the valley lies another valley, on the slopes of which are the German trenches gashed along the upper edge.

From the general's headquarters in the midst of a grove one may sit at a powerful telescope and watch the thrillingly impressive battle that has been raging along that part of the line for weeks. Telephones screened by thatches of straw are constantly in touch with each battery, each trench, with the captive balloon observer, as well as with the higher officers some miles away. Every detail of the operations is in instant reach of the general and his staff, and reports are constantly coming in from different stations on the battlefield.

The observation balloon was down when I reached the field. A detachment of soldiers, with several officers, was gathered about it. It was a grotesquely shaped object, quite unlike any balloon I had ever before seen—a huge caterpillarlike body with a smaller caterpillar clinging to it and curled under it at one end. The basket was small and evidently designed for but one occupant. A heavy wagon with a drum which wound or unwound the wire stood near the balloon, and a number of horses produced the motive power that drew the balloon from the sky down to the earth.

Irvin Cobb, one of our party, eagerly accepted an invitation to go up in the balloon. He is a man of some girth and weight, and when he had taken his place in the basket with the observer there was not much more than standing room. All of the sandbags were cast off and the balloon rose steadily toward the south and in the direction of the battle front.

To those of us below, the balloon seemed to sway and rock violently, but the basket to which was attached the wire hung firm and steady. Only the balloon bags swayed, a fortunate circumstance for Cobb, who claims to be a notoriously bad sailor.

After the balloon had ascended several hundred feet it was halted while the two passengers were given a chance to scan and study the battleground ahead. The balloon was then rolled down by the horses and the two occupants climbed out of the basket. To one it was merely part of the day's work; to the other it was the experience of a lifetime, as well as a great privilege which probably no other civilian has been given the excitement of enjoying.

It had not seemed a dangerous trip, but the events of the succeeding few minutes proved that it might easily have been.

A second time the balloon went up, this time with an observer who would spend hours in the air before coming down.

The balloon had risen only a few hundred feet when there was a flurry of excitement among the officers and soldiers on the ground. They were pointing up and shouting to the observer. Quick orders were given and a squad of soldiers were rushed to the wagon to which the balloon wire was attached.

◆

I caught the words, "Franzosiche flieger," and as I followed the direction of the uplifted eyes I saw, thousands of feet up and swiftly approaching the balloon field, a flyer who was sailing across the blue depths of the heavens. He was about 7,000 feet up.

"It's a Frenchman," somebody shouted.

There was no time to use the horses. The balloon must be gotten down at once, and twenty or thirty soldiers were rushing to man the harness. In less time than it takes to tell it they were at the traces and were bending to their work.

In the meantime the balloon guns had sighted the menace in the sky. A big white ball of smoke suddenly appeared against the blue, and a little later the sound of the exploding shell reached our ears. The shot was a range finder and fell far short of the flyer.

Don't you find as much first class writing and as many first class pictures in The Sunday Tribune as you find in any fifteen or twenty-five cent magazine?

The next ball of unfolding smoke, so much like a great white flower, came nearer the flying target, but not near enough to turn the aviator from his course. He came on toward the balloon field as though the exploding shells were not to be feared.

◆

It was a thrilling race. On the ground the squad of soldiers, twenty or thirty, were swiftly drawing the balloonist down to safety, while in the heavens a daring aviator was swiftly approaching a point where his bomb would be effective.

After the first two shots from the balloon gun, whose location we could not see, the shots came with greater frequency, and the white bursts of smoke drew closer and closer to the flyer. Every instant I expected to see a shell explode so close that its concussion would capsize the machine.

It was also evident that the flyer was becoming worried, for he suddenly shifted his course and swung off toward the northeast. The next three or four shells fell wide of their mark, but then again they drew nearer and nearer.

One cannot imagine a more dramatic spectacle. The tiny gray object in the sky, probably 7,000 or 8,000 feet up, the sunlight occasionally flashing on his propeller and the hovering clouds from bursting shells floating all around him. To those who watched from below the shells seemed very close to him, but perhaps they really burst hundreds of yards from him—too far, certainly, to wreck his machine.

He was heading for a great filmy cloud behind which was security from the sight of the hunters below. The balloon and the ballooned men were safe, for the Frenchman was now far away from the field and was fleeing to safety. He was doubtless traveling at a speed of seventy or eighty miles an hour, perhaps more, so that in a very short time his plane melted into the gray mists and then was lost to view behind the denser volume of the cloud.

The battle was over and the quarry had escaped. When next seen he had doubled in a wide circle and was far out of range. We caught another short glimpse of him as he flew across a channel of blue sky and hurried behind the friendly screen of another great cloud.

It was an ideal day for the work of a hostile flyer. The air was clear and the land below lay crisp and clean out in the sunlight. Floating lazily across the heavens were many huge masses of filmy clouds, sufficiently dense to afford him havens of safety when the shells became too menacing and yet not so heavy as to darken the land below.

The operator in the balloon did not seem excited. He had probably been through the experience many times before. When I left the balloon field he was preparing to start up again. If he got killed, very well. He would die serving his country, seems to be the spirit that animates the entire German army. Among officers and men there is a devotion to country which is as great and self-sacrificing as that which characterized the patriotic devotion of the Japanese in 1904.

As a German said to me, "It is not agreeable to be killed, but if we must die, very well. We die for our country."

Once more on that eventful day, Sept. 29, I saw a bombardment of a hostile flyer.

After leaving the balloon field the [illegible] staff officers, together with other [illegible]man officers, took us to a posit[illegible] behind the trenches. In a clum[illegible] and bushes at the edge of a hill [illegible]

Art Institute Reception a Great City Tea Party—Many Social Functions Mark the Week.

By Mme. X.

SOCIETY took a decided brace last week, donned its pretty new frocks and smart new hats, and went forth to see and be seen. Several hundreds welcomed Miss Rosamond Goodrich, the eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Albert Goodrich of 920 Lincoln parkway, who made her debut last Monday afternoon at a big reception, followed by a dinner dance. The same day Mrs. Carter Harrison greeted a host of her friends at the first of her two "at homes," given in honor of her daughter-in-law, Mrs. Carter Harrison Jr., a bride of last summer. The occasion was also a house warming, as it was the first time the Harrisons had entertained in the charming apartments, built by themselves and the Heaton Owsleys, at Briar place and Sheridan road.

Monday afternoon was also the initial one of Mrs. James Keeley's four Mondays in November, when about fifty dropped in at the Keeley residence, 1309 Ritchie place. Mmes. William J. Calhoun and H. H. Kohlsaat presided at the tea table.

On Tuesday Mrs. Moses Wentworth gave a gay tea-dance for two debutantes, Miss Sylvia Shaw, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Howard Shaw, and Miss Roxana Wentworth Bowen of New York, Mrs. Wentworth's niece.

That same afternoon the reception at the Art institute, which opened the autumn exhibit of American art, proved to be, as it always is, a great city tea party, where thousands from the north, south, and west sides came and filled the institute from top to bottom—especially around the tea tables. There the "bread line" reached formidable dimensions.

At most afternoon functions refreshments—tea, coffee, sandwiches, and cake—are below par. The despair of the hostess is the amount of perfectly good food left over. Not so at the Art institute receptions. Pictures and statues sharpen appetites. The women presiding at the club tea tables work in shifts pouring liquids and serving solids, and by the end of the afternoon proclaim themselves exhausted by their task. One famished art connoisseur flanked his cup of coffee with six pieces of cake. But this was a case of excessive enthusiasm.

The gathering as a whole is one of Chicago's friendliest, most commendable institutions. It is the only general rendezvous for the city's many social groups since the old days of the annual charity ball.

The four clubs who share labors of dispensing refreshments are the Antiquarian, the Chicago Woman's Club, the Fortnightly, and the Friday club.

* * *

Hundreds of those present at the reception, lovers and habitués of the Art institute, missed the well known presence of the late W. M. R. French, for so many years director and presiding genius of the institute. His quiet, friendly personality always made itself felt there, no matter how large the crowd was that surged through those hospitable galleries.

His idea was to make the building the people's rendezvous, a place for rest, recreation, and inspiration. Whenever there have been great conventions or other gatherings in Chicago the Art institute always hangs out its cordial sign in big letters, "Open to the public." Even during the aviation meet here four years ago the galleries were open night and day to afford a place for the crowds that poured into the nearby park to rest mind and body amid evidences of the world's creations of beauty and thought.

Wednesday afternoon society, six or seven hundred strong, met at the Midway Gardens for tea, dancing, and bridge, and the sale of the tickets for the occasion resulted in a goodly sum for the United Charities. The occasion was a really charming affair in the picturesque surroundings of the place where the tiers of tables and the overhanging galleries give such a chance to see and be seen.

To return to the week's calendar which records so many good sized social gatherings. Thursday afternoon saw most of the representative society people, who had met daily the preceding four or five days for pleasure, gathered once more in the Blackstone crystal ballroom to hear from Madam Vandervelde, wife of the Belgian secretary of state, the tale of Belgium's sorrows. We have all read it again and again, but it acquires fresh poignancy and appeal from the lips of a personality so earnest, so dignified, so imbued with the tragedy of her mission as Madam Vandervelde.

The meeting was under the auspices of some of Chicago's most conspicuous and prominent people. Mesdames W. J. Chalmers, Cyrus H. McCormick, John Sherman, Charles Henrotin, John Barton Payne, Joseph Cudahy, and Miss Jane Addams were among the women actively interested in the meeting, which was also energetically promoted by Hobart C. Chatfield-Taylor, Eames MacVeagh, Arthur Aldis, Mitchell Follansbee, David B. Jones, E. L. Millard, Dr. Cyrille Vermeeren, C. C. Curtiss, Charles F. Harding, Charles Wouters, and Felix J. Streyckmans.

Friday afternoon saw the clans again gathered at the symphony concert, where each week marks new accessions to the winter colony. Mrs. John Spoor has just returned from a visit to her daughter, Mrs. Thornhill Broome, at Santa Barbara. Mrs. John Clark is another pillar of the concerts who is at home again after spending a long summer at her pretty seaside house at Marion, Mass. Mrs. Marshall Field is still in Chicago and is one of the orchestra's most devoted supporters.

* * *

Apropos of music, the meeting of fifty or sixty society music lovers last Tuesday morning at the Arthur Meekers' fine new residence was an interesting event. They were invited to hear a talk by Miss Maynard of New York on the work of the music league of that city. The object of this league is to help musical artists of talent and real merit to a chance for appreciation and recognition. Mrs. H. O Hevemeyer is its president, Mrs. Willard Straight first vice president, Mrs. Otto Kahn second vice president, and twenty-five other prominent New Yorkers are aiding in the work.

The desire is to form in Chicago a committee of nine to pass on the musical worth of artists. Their recommendations will enable these musicians to be heard by the New York committee. A favorable verdict from this latter committee will insure them concert engagements.

The Music league will give four Monday morning musicals at the Blackstone, beginning tomorrow morning. These musicals make a double appeal, as all money made, over and above the expenses of the concerts, is to be given to the Chicago United Charities.

One of the women most actively interested in this movement to liberate unrecognized artists from bondage is Mrs. Casserly of 70 Bellevue place, a newcomer to Chicago. She is a member of the well known Cudahy family and is herself an accomplished pianist. Last Sunday, at a delightful musical given by her brother and his wife, the Joseph Cudahys, at their new apartment, 1415 Astor street, Mrs. Casserly accompanied the Russian violinist, Nikolai Sokoloff, who has been recently attracting so much attention here, both socially and in a musical way.

He is a most interesting and striking personality, and a wizard with the violin. He comes of a long line of Russian wandering minstrels, an institution utterly unknown in this country. These minstrels roam over Russia from village to village, playing at weddings and other festas. A Russian wedding is a prolonged revel. Mr. Sokoloff tells how he, a child of 8, played his fiddle three days and three nights at one wedding, falling asleep in his corner of the room, and being awakened by the proddings of the dancers, only to sink again into slumber when the turn was over. He came to this country at the age of 13, alone, unknown, and desperately poor. A well known woman, Miss Ernestine Ingersol of New Haven, became interested in his evident genius and gave him a good musical education. Her death left him again alone and poor, but he made his way in spite of this, and he stands now—largely thanks to Mrs. Casserly—on the threshold of recognition and success. He married in America a daughter of Admiral Herrick.

Those who gathered on Tuesday at Mrs. Meeker's to hear the talk on the Music league divided their interest between the subject of the discourse and the Meekers' new mansion. Seldom has a house attracted so much attention and discussion during its construction as this one. The prominent position of the Meeker family, the prominent position of the architect, Charles C. Platt of New York, and above all, the prominent position of the house, combine to insure the liveliest interest and attention on the part of the public alive to Chicago's growth and embellishment.

The site of the house is incomparable. Mr. Platt himself said that the knew no residence in any great city with one to touch it for beauty and commanding location. The exterior of the building is said by connoisseurs to be the purest Georgian architecture. Its lines are severe, its proportions are—well, as Henry James might say, they are not conciliatory. The interior promises to be stately and beautiful. The three rooms that compose what the Italians call the "piano nobile" are superbly proportioned. They are a charmingly paneled music room, a lovely French reception room, and a palatial dining room. The unusally high ceilings give an impressive effect to the suite.

That they are not yet furnished is due in part to the European war. A German bomb dropped from a "Taube" in Paris on the factory making some of the draperies and rugs ordered for the Meeker house stayed their completion.

Next door to the Meeker residence the John Louis Shortalls are building. This is the fourth home they have built in or near Chicago. The first one was in Prairie avenue, the second one in Hubbard Woods, the third one on the corner of Astor street and Burton place, and now this one beyond the park completes the quartet. As Mrs. Shortall, true to her New England birth, always builds typical colonial houses, there is much interest as to how such a cozy, low ceilinged home, with its air of New England traditions, will look next to the representative of the stately Georgian epoch.

All of Count Giulio Bolognese's friends are preparing the fatted calf and making ready to slay the stalled ox to celebrate his return soon to Chicago. At the outbreak of the war his government sent him to Lyons in southern France. It seemed as if it was to be his fate to stay there until the close of the struggle, but according to news received direct from Count Bolognese this is not the case. He is expected here before the middle of November.

His fellow countryman, Romano Lodi Fé, who was at the Italian consulate in Chicago for two or three years, and very popular socially, has been for two years at Monastir in Macedonia. A few months ago he was made a member of the Italian commission to restore order in Albania, a mission which failed, so he has returned to his important solitude in Macedonia.

MRS. FRANCES J. JOHNSON

Mrs. Francis Johnson, who recently came in from Lake Forest for the winter, is one of the outdoorsy young women of society who take real delight in games and tramps. Out in Lake Forest during the summer Mrs. Johnson not only is one of the active hostesses, but she ever can be relied upon to lend her support to the summer's festivities. Always she is an interested onlooker at the polo matches; she is quite as interested in the horse shows and the golf course and tennis field likewise claim her attention. In this picture she was snapped just before she came in from the country and as she started out for a walk over the picturesque country roads around Lake Forest. She is garbed for the occasion in short frock, sweater, and a hat which will shield her eyes from the sun. And her walking stick is not an uninteresting detail.

NEWS OF THE CHICAGO WOMEN'S CLUBS.

By Inez Travers.

THE charities of the year were planned for and generous sums added for the drastic need of the disturbed times whe the appeal extraordinary came to the Chicago Woman's club from the American National Red Cross society. And the answer is efficient work at home and an appeal sent out by the Chicago Woman's club in the following words to all the women's clubs in Cook county:

> The men of eight nations in embattled Europe are being mangled and slain by the tens of thousands. Cities are being laid waste, fields desolated, families scattered, women and children made homeless.
> It is upon these women and children that the great burden of suffering falls. They are innocent victims of a conflict for which they have been in no sense responsible. With each new day countless women find that they must take up, single handed and alone, a household's fight against hunger and cold. These women, for whom America is the embodiment of the peace spirit, are stretching appealing hands to us for relief from the manifold forms of suffering that are the grim camp followers of war.
>
> The American National Red Cross, of which President Wilson is the head, and which is the humanitarian arm of the United States government, is sending surgeons, nurses, hospital supplies, and new clothing into the war stricken districts. The fear that this merciful work carried on by an organization so efficient, so wise, so far reaching in its influence, may lengthen the struggle, is unfounded. The cost of maintaining the armies is so enormous that the sum total of the funds which the Red Cross services of the world can hope to expend in relief work could not lengthen the contest by a single day, even if its equivalent were diverted to so destructive a purpose. On the contrary, what it is doing is to save and lengthen the lives and shorten the sufferings of the victims.
>
> Because it is the traditional right and privilege of women to save life and relieve suffering and because the need is increasingly urgent, the Chicago Woman's club appeals to the women of Chicago to give to the Red Cross as generously and as quickly as they can.

How rapidly the work has progressed in the last week can only be realized by a look at the bales and bundles and boxes at the warehouse ready for shipment. If you saw them you would wonder where on earth they came from, but if you went visiting among the clubs you would soon be answered.

At the Chicago Woman's club no less important a place than the board room has been dedicated to the work. At any time of the day that you should happen in you would find sewing machines going at sweatshop speed. The long table in the center of the room once cluttered with biennial plans now creaks beneath a load of materials at one end while at the other women who have been too busy with their brains and pens to sew now ply scissors and needle with the skill of seamstresses. On chairs and canvas covered floor, on window sills and radiators, and, in fact, on every available spot, are piles of bandages, pads, gray flannel pajamas, and all manner of supplies, including baby bootles, all bearing the tiny red cross and tied ready for wrapping.

Through the activities of the club the department stores have set aside a special place for the selling of the supplies, and they give a discount on all material bought by the dozen yards for the Red Cross work as well as free shipping service to the warehouse. Each day a member of the Woman's club is in charge of the Red Cross department at the stores ready to give information and advice as well as instruction in the making of bandages.

Mrs. Arthur M. Small of 52 East Division street has organized a sewing corps of twelve assistants among her friends, each of whom has six workers under her and the head of the six again enlists the help of six other women for whom she promises to be responsible until an almost endless chain is formed. Although the work of each member is not great in itself the total is stupendous.

Other groups on the plan of Mrs. Small's are being formed on the south side. At the Eli Bates settlement a project is on foot to employ thirty of the now unemployed women of the neighborhood at the rate of a dollar a day to make supplies.

Mrs. Carl Buehl responded to the Woman's club's appeal in the name of the German women of Chicago and assures the club that they will immediately set to work upon supplies to be sent to the German Red Cross. Most of the other supplies from the clubs will be shipped without specification.

The Ravenswood Woman's club and the Oak Park Woman's club were among the first to answer the appeal. At the Convalescent home in Evanston a group of young girls spend part of each day under the instruction of the superintendent who is a Red Cross nurse, sewing and cutting and rolling bandages.

cleverly concealed an observation point from which the effect of the shells could be observed. From this position the line of battle was plainly visible across a valley. The German trenches were along the opposite rim of the valley and the German batteries were behind us some distance.

◆

Under cover of a fringe of low trees we approached this lookout position. A telescope was mounted near the brink of the hill and a straw thatched shelter hidden in the bushes contained the telephone equipment which kept the officers in instant touch with the batteries to the rear as well as with the balloon observer and the general field headquarters, a mile or more further back.

From this advanced position the valley and the German trenches and the fierce and incessant shelling of the latter lay before us as on a stage.

Upon the opposite rim of the valley was a beet sugar mill in the village of Cerny. This spot was the objective of the enemy's artillery, and their shells were dropping on it and beside it and behind it with dreadful accuracy.

We estimated that the shells burst at intervals of five seconds. The reverberations were melted together in an almost unbroken roar. Great strips of the roof of the mill were lifted and sent crashing down in a volume of smoke and dust. Once the building started to burn, but the blaze soon subsided.

It was inconceivable that human beings could stand such a savage rain of shrapnel, and I was relieved to learn that the Germans had shifted from the trenches at that point and had moved off to the right and the left, so that the enemy's fire fell on a deserted position.

Two weeks before this same position had been the scene of a desperate infantry battle. A German regiment had attacked the French and English in the trenches flanking the sugar mill and had driven them out with terrific loss. The allies fell back six or seven hundred yards to another and stronger trench, while the Germans occupied the abandoned trench. Between the two opposing trenches there were many dead and wounded who could not be succored.

At 4 o'clock the following morning, while it was dark and raining, the allies advanced in strong force and approached very near the German outposts before they were discovered.

"Don't shoot! We are Germans!" shouted the Frenchmen, but in a voice that betrayed them.

The Germans opened up with a heavy fire and again drove the enemy back, but by so doing they advanced to a position which was exposed and weak. At daylight the French artillery, with deadly precision, began to comb the German position, starting first to the right and drawing gradually nearer. Every foot of ground was torn by falling shrapnel.

The colonel of the regiment was standing with one of his officers, Major von Herwarth, formerly attached to the German embassy at Washington. A shot struck his arm, passed on through his stomach, and inflicted a mortal wound, from which he died twenty-four hours later. Major Herwarth, being then the senior officer in command of the regiment, ordered his men to fall back to the cover of a grove of trees where they would be reasonably secure from the advancing storm of shrapnel which was methodically and implacably sweeping toward them.

To reach the woods it was necessary to traverse an open space where the troops were exposed to the fire of the enemy. Eleven officers and two hundred men fell in a few moments, but the remainder reached the woods and its shelter.

Still later another desperate charge occurred at the sugar mill, and hundreds of dead and wounded were struck down between the two opposing trenches. There had been no cessation in the desperate struggle at this point. There has been no truce during which the dead and wounded could be carried from the field, so that for two weeks the bodies of the fallen had lain out in the open field, torn by shrapnel and shells and decomposing, with the hideous smell assailing the country for a mile around.

The soldiers in the advanced trenches were kept supplied with cigars to fight the nausea to which they are exposed. Waves of sickening stenches drifted back to where we stood, more than a mile away. It was terrible.

For a long time we watched, with fascinated eyes, the tragic conflict that filled the horizon with bursting shells and clouds of dirt and ashes. Huge black clouds of smoke, small white clouds of smoke, great uplifts of debris marked the vicinity of the mill at Cerny.

Off in the trenches to the left we saw Germans moving about. Their position was not at the moment being shelled. Other men were carrying something across a field behind the trench. It looked like a body.

◆

Then we saw, far to the left of the mill, a huge cloud of black smoke which marked the explosion of a heavy French shell. Instantly all of the figures along the German trenches in that position disappeared as though by magic. Not a human being could be seen. The trenches lay as if deserted, but we knew that great numbers of soldiers were crouching in the honeycombs of pits, reasonably safe from shrapnel, and hoping that a heavier shell might not drop among them and tear the trenches open.

When the firing to the left began the officer in charge of the German batteries behind us gave a quiet order to the man down is the straw covered shelter. It was the telephone operator.

We were told to expect the battery to go into action. And in a couple of moments there was a series of heavy, thunderous explosions off to the rear. Then the sound of shells that screamed over us, and every eye was focused upon the spot to the left, toward which the battery was pointed.

Suddenly, beyond the German trenches, there blossomed a round, white ball of smoke, quickly followed by another, and still another, and still others, until each shot had been accounted for.

The signal was then given for a "salve," or volley. In the American service it is called a "salvo." After a few seconds of waiting there was a thunderous chorus of big guns behind us and the sound of the screaming shells passing us, and then we watched for the puffs of smoke that marked where they were to explode. Four white balls suddenly blossomed above the enemy's position and a terrific upheaval of red earth marked where the fifth had exploded on the ground.

It was expected that the action of the German battery would draw the fire of some of the opposing batteries, and we waited expectantly for the shells of the allies to begin dropping or exploding about us. But none did. A number of shells struck about 500 yards ahead of where we stood, but evidently the German battery was so well screened from the enemy that its location had not been accurately determined.

The allies had no balloons from which to observe and direct their artillery fire, or to locate the German batteries, and so were obliged to feel around for them. A couple of days before two German officers on duty in advance of this battery had been killed by a shell that found them.

For a half hour or more we watched the tremendous artillery duel. There was very little infantry firing. Sharp pops reached our ears from time to time, little commas among the great exclamation points.

From this advanced position on the tree screened brink of the hill we were led back under cover of the low trees to an open field, where, by following a telephone wire on the ground, we presently reached the battery of ten centimeter guns. They were about a quarter or half mile behind, and were planted behind straw covered earthworks.

The rising slope of a hill obscured the position of the allies, and all the firing was indirect. A telephone station was down in a straw thatched hole, which looked quite comfortable and cozy, and an operator was receiving reports after each "salve" from the balloon observer and the observing station ahead. If the shells fell short or went wild the telephone corrected the range, and the next shells would strike nearer their target.

Just now the battery was shelling one of the allies' batteries behind the allies' line of trenches.

"Fünf tausend vier hundert meters!" sang out a voice from the hole in the ground, and the range was at once passed on to the man in command of the battery.

Three miles to the allies' artillery!

The distance to this battery, doubtless at least a mile behind the French trenches, was only 5,400 meters even when the German battery was firing at a position far down the line to the left. In a straight line to the enemy's trenches it could not have been more than two miles, or little more than a mile and a half from the observation point on the hill where we had stood a short time before. From the latter point to the German trenches was less than a mile.

Salvo after salvo was fired, with intermissions only long enough to correct ranges and reload the guns. At each discharge the barrels of the great rifles recoiled sharply and then easily slipped back to normal.

Suddenly an abrupt order was given to cease firing. There were a few hurried words from the telephone man and then the eyes of the officers began to scan the skies. A hostile flyer had been sighted. As long as he was hovering above the guns must cease belching out the smoke that would betray their position to a watchful hawk, who would be studying the earth to find the location of the battery.

At first we could not find the flyer. Then, a mile in the rear and less than 100 yards from the grove of trees that sheltered the generals' field headquarters, a great volume of white smoke sprang up.

"He's dropped a bomb!" some one said.

"He's spotted the field headquarters!"

The German officers fixed their glasses on the sky and soon found the flyer, thousands of feet above where the burst of smoke was seen and almost directly over the general's position.

The balloon gunners also had seen him, for now there appeared as by magic the sinister balls of white smoke high in the sky. Then came to our ears the dull boom of the exploding shells.

We couldn't see the balloon gun. It may have been the one at the aviation camp or it may have been another, but as shell after shell exploded we could see that the gunners were getting the range and altitude. Closer and closer the white balls drew toward the gray plane sailing across the blue, very small and appallingly high.

We saw the flyer suddenly shift his course. Now he was headed directly toward the battery, which he may have seen and which he now might be preparing to attack. One at least of those gathered about the battery observed his course with deep concern. I wondered if a dropping bomb could be seen in time to enable one to beat a masterly retreat from the spot where it would light.

There was no alarm manifest in the faces of the German officers and no movement indicative of impending flight. So I stood my ground as each minute brought the flyer nearer to a position directly above us.

In the meantime, the exploding shells were bursting nearer to the flyer. One or two suddenly blossomed immediately ahead of him and he began to zigzag. He no longer flew straight and purposeful. If he had been bent upon attacking the battery, that object had been abandoned and his one purpose now was to escape the shells from the balloon gun. His own safety was now the paramount consideration.

I was relieved to see that the flyer's course no longer led him toward the battery. And I tried to imagine what must be the sensations which that flyer was undergoing. Upon all sides hung the floating balls of smoke and in the middle of them he steered his machine in a zigzagging course which made it difficult to hit him.

A great cloud lay dead ahead of him and if he could reach that safely he would be secure from the exploding shells. The balloon gunners knew it, too, and their firing became faster and truer. At one time there were at least eight floating clouds of smoke near the aviator and some seemed so close that we could not believe he would escape.

But he did. We saw the aeroplane fade into the edge of a great cloud and in another instant he was lost to sight. A little later he again appeared, flying rapidly for his own lines, and then once more faded from view behind another cloud. That was the last we saw of him.

After a time the battery resumed its firing and before we left I noticed that the military balloon, which had been hastily hauled down, was once more rising into the sky.

If any man wants to feel the ultimate in human thrills, let him join the aviation corps during war times. Death is reaching for him every moment, and yet, instead of scaring him to a nervous wreck, it is quite conceivable that the intoxication of his work is so fascinating in its perils that he really enjoys being a target in the heavens, for the chances seem to be ten to one that the shells will not bring him down.

In the meantime, he has the knowledge that those below dread him and his bombs as much as he dreads the shells that search the skies around him.

Woman Will Talk On Women and War.

ROSIKER SCHURMMER

The peace committee of the Chicago Political Equality league will present Mme. Rosika Schwimmer, the Hungarian suffragist and peace advocate, in a public lecture in Fullerton hall, the Art institute, on Thursday evening, Nov. 19. The subject of Mme. Schwimmer's address will be "Women and War." Mme. Schwimmer came to this country primarily as a messenger from the women of thirteen countries to President Wilson to ask his aid in bringing about peace in Europe. This message delivered, she has yielded to the request of Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt, president of the International Woman's Suffrage alliance, and toured the south and east so that the women of the United States may know of the strong sentiment for peace among the unfortunate women of the war ridden countries.

Mrs LIDA T. BOUGHTON
MATZENE PHOTO

Mrs. Lida T. Boughton is corresponding secretary of the Argus club which has been organized for the purpose of establishing and maintaining a chain of rest and recreation rooms for women in business. The first meeting of the club was held last Friday in the Hotel La Salle. Mrs. Daniel Munro is president of the club.

WOMEN—Will You VOTE for a Larger Army and Navy—OR NOT?

When The Sunday Tribune raised the question of Women and the War two weeks ago, it asked its women readers to write their views on war. The answers were many and interesting. But, while interesting, they were vague upon the ONE BIG PROBLEM THAT THE UNITED STATES FACES TODAY:

SHALL THE UNITED STATES HAVE A LARGER ARMY AND NAVY?

The Tribune would like to know the opinions of its women readers on these concrete questions:

1. THOSE OF YOU WHO NOW HAVE THE RIGHT TO VOTE FOR MEMBERS OF CONGRESS—Do you want the Congressman from your district to vote for a larger army and navy? Do you want the Senator from your State to vote for a larger army and navy?
2. OR DO YOU THINK THE PRESENT STATUS OF THE ARMY AND NAVY COMMENSURATE WITH PRESENT CONDITIONS—and FUTURE POSSIBLE EMERGENCIES?

Address Women's Editor,
Sunday Tribune, Chicago.

Schoolboys Should Drill.

There should be a military drill established in every public school and college in this country. Then if war should come—and I believe it will—our young men and boys would understand military tactics sufficiently to be of help, instead of serving as mere targets for the enemy's rifles.

On the other hand if war should not come the military drill would have done no harm, but rather great good, for it would save thousands of our boys from the curse of tobacco, especially the cigaret habit.

I believe in this country being prepared for war. Unpreparedness will not save the lives of our husbands and sons if war should come in this country. An efficient army and navy will be our only hope of safety!

Army Should Be Increased.

The United States should have an increased army and navy and the quicker the better. Special inducements should be made to attract soldiers and marines. There should be a special war tax, more warships and everything that makes for preparedness.

The American people have so long enjoyed peace that it is hard for them to think seriously of war. But war is rampant, the very air vibrates with the horrors enacted across the ocean. So, if we want peace, let us become so formidable in fighting strength that we shall have peace at our own terms. Great military strength is naturally "peace insurance."

We Americans do not know at what hour we may be called upon to suffer the horrors of war. Forewarned, they say, is forearmed. We have bleeding Europe before our eyes. Let us be forearmed—quickly—now!

A. K.

Favors Strong Navy.

The United States, the greatest nation in the world, cannot afford to be weak and fearful. A larger navy and army does not mean war, it means protection; it inspires courage and faith. I believe that this glorious country should stand first in peace and last in war, with a strong army and navy as an emblem of the faith and strength of the United States.

Mrs. C. D.

Mothers Pray for Peace.

Does woman want war? Does woman want murder in her own home? Does woman want destitution and suffering in her household? Does woman believe in big armies and navies? Does woman approve of firearms and fiendish racks of punishment in the home?

The home is but the nation in miniature. Love is the greatest force for progress and development in the home. Love will some day be the universal force upon which the life of nations will be built. Then the Germans shall protect the Belgians—the French shall love the Austrians—the English shall cherish the Turks.

The mothers of the race have but one prayer in their hearts—that greed, avarice, and hatred shall forever disappear and peace shall reign in the hearts of men.

B. G. R.

Banish Tin Soldiers.

If my country were morally in the wrong, I could only endure patiently in discouragement and depression the ills I could not avert, but if my country were within its rights, and its warfare were against the invader and destroyer of its homes, most assuredly I believe I could inspire and encourage and bid my kinsmen godspeed, and help in all ways possible to a woman. I believe that if left alone and desolate in a war swept land, I, too, would rather go down to oblivion than yield to a lawless foe.

I wish that mothers everywhere would banish the little tin soldiers from the nursery, and from the time their babies can toddle and reach for whatever takes their fancy they should be taught to unfailingly respect the rights of the other fellow. Let the child's first lessons as he begins to be self-reliant and self-assertive be character building in the principles of justice and obedience to law.

Mrs. Edith Haskin.

Large Force Invites War.

Thank you for this opportunity to voice the American woman's mind on war. If we increase our army and navy and make a national ideal of militarism, what is to prevent such a calamity coming to us which now drags Europe in the blood of its men? The American woman cries "No!" by all that is sacred, "No." Do not set up this standard in the face of our boys and girls.

We find it easy to obey our noble president's admonition to remain neutral about the European war. The hearts of American women have no response for the false call of national issues. Instead they bleed for the women of Europe. We feel the sickness, destitution, heartbreak, death. We see the wife and mother awaiting in hardship and terror the dreaded news; it comes at last that curt cold message that the work of her life, the bloom of her heart lies like a dog in a ditch of blood.

To us the war means just that tragedy multiplied a million times, yet never massed, never losing its individual cry of anguish. O, the pity and the madness of it! To us it cannot matter which king, which statesman is right. None, none is right! What national issue under heaven can be worth the cost of all this dear labor and love?

The fact that many of these women are taught to believe their sacrifice is for their country and God does not lessen the woe of it, nor alter the lie of it. Who has dared to teach them that? "I desire mercy and not sacrifice," has said the Christian God on whom the nations dare to call.

A nation is no reality apart from the men and women that compose it, and the state that ruthlessly slaughters its citizens and prates of patriotism, prates of a myth. We would best pray God take away even that bitter consolation from the women of Europe that they are serving their country, and flash the white light of truth on them and us, that no righteous cause can be served by sacrificng millions of bonds of love to the gods of greed and hate.

Helena Nye Lehnhard.

Preparedness Best Defense.

What or who will defend America if her sons do not? It is only in a country like the United States that people can arise to their full height as individuals; consequently, we must keep our land free from the hand of tyrants. War for glory is wholesale murder, to pamper the greed of kings; but war waged for freedom is of God. We see on our horizon a tremendous war machine, eager for conquest. We should prepare for war; and our preparation must be to the last degree more effectual than the enemy's. The fact of our preparedness may be our most powerful defense.

Mrs. J. E. L.

Guard for All Nations.

I am in favor of a greater standing army and navy, with all possible modern equipment, until all civilized countries have combined on one peace treaty, each furnishing its pro rata number of men as a police guard for all nations.

Mrs. Theresa Niebuhr.

Need Army of Women.

Nature leads us to protect our bodies from disease germs by means of an army of doctors, our homes from thieves by an army of police, our country from alien invasion by an army of soldiers. But when, as now in Europe, the individual becomes secondary to the state to the extent that the interests of the female sex are ignored, it is because of limited human vision.

We need a larger army of efficient women who will teach their sons and daughters to interpret the fear of God to mean "love and protect thy neighbor as thyself."

The fact that The Tribune editors are offering to pay for woman's expression on this vital question is significant of the attitude of thinking men toward her opportunities.

Harriet Pratt.

Educate for No War.

How much greater cause we have for peace than for war: but have we been educated thus? False patriotism is an awful thing, and we must teach true patriotism—far different than a desire to be shot for our country—to live for our country. They need us.

It takes something to arouse the people, to awaken and teach. This horrible bloodshed is doing its share to do all this. This will do more good in the way of showing the wrongs and horrors of war than centuries of peace could ever do.

Take the tin soldier away from the boys, for impressions made on little brains are hardest to erase. With no soldiers to fight and no desires to do so we can hasten the education for no war.

Rose Hacker Svihla.

No Human Cannon Feed.

There is but one answer possible to the query, "Do women approve of war?" No! a thousand times no! Women believe in peace. They believe in conserving the young manhood of the race, for they well know at what agony of travail and years of self-sacrifice human cannon-feed is produced. To paraphrase the eloquent oratory of revolutionary days: "Men cry 'peace,' but there is no peace." Women must cry "peace" with one voice and one accord until men heed and give us peace, else were this labor, these tears and this mortal struggle in vain and the death knell of civilization were sounded.

MISS LUCY BURLESON

MISS SIDNEY BURLESON

MISS JANE GREGORY

Miss Jane Gregory, like the Misses Lucy and Sydney Burleson, is to enter society without a formal debut. The three young women are from Texas and are the daughters of cabinet officers.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—[Special correspondence.]—After nearly a month devoted to house hunting, Mrs. Thomas Watts Gregory, wife of the attorney general, finally decided to take the Heistands' house at 1532 Sixteenth street. They are moving in this week—at least they think they are, if their furniture, which is on the way up from Texas, gets here.

Miss Jane Gregory has finally decided not to make a formal debut. She is going to follow the example of the two other Texas cabinet girls, the Misses Lucy and Sydney Burleson, and go out without the bother of coming out, having all the fun with none of the responsibility.

One doesn't know whether it is democratic economy influencing the liberal spirit of Texas, or the other way round, in view of the predominance of Texas in the cabinet, whether it may not be Texas thrift influencing the administration. But here are three Texas girls—two already established cabinet belles, and a new comer, all from the Lone Star state, and all refusing the burdens of formal presentation to capital society. It rather looks like a conspiracy to defraud Washington of some little glory.

As a matter of fact, quite a few of the girls who were listed as this season's debutantes are renegging. Whether they are frightened at the rather gloomy social outlook and have decided to wait a more convenient, or at any rate a more promising season, or whether the example set by these Texas girls, who are the only cabinet girls of debutante age, appeals to them, deponent sayeth not.

For the moment, however, debutantes are less interesting to society than brides. The two big weddings of last week—that of Frida Tillman and Lawrence Frazer of Nashville and that of Miss Louise Hellen and Tom Bowers—brought out the biggest gatherings of smart people as yet seen at any function this season. The Tillman-Frazer wedding was a particularly brilliant one, as the bride is the daughter of a naval officer and her father who gave her away, and many of the men among the guests were in full uniform.

Louise Hellen's marriage to Tom Bowers brought out really a bigger crowd and a more distinguished one than Martha Bowers and Bob Taft's two weeks earlier.

The big wedding of this week was that of Miss Mary McCauley and Herbert Seymour Howard, on Tuesday—election day. It was at St. John's, of course, and just between ourselves St. John's, while it is traditionally the right place for Washington brides of the smart set to get married in, is not at all a pretty church for the purpose. It has no middle aisle, for one thing, and its side aisles are so narrow that when it comes to walking two abreast the two are uncomfortably crowded, and have the effect of rather edging in sidewise. All of which is heresy, of course. But it really is a pity that the worthies of several generations back who were responsible for building the church could not have foreseen how popular it was going to be in a hundred years or so for society weddings.

One of the recently announced engagements in which Chicago has an interest is that of Miss Almeda Barr, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Lester A. Barr, and Frank Atherton Howard of Chicago. Washington knows Almeda well and favorably. Since her graduation from Vassar in 1911 she has been one of the capital's popular girls. She plays around with the army set mostly, though she has no visible connection with it, and is a most attractive young person. Like this year's debutantes, she never formally debutted, but she has had just as much fun as if she had. Mr. Howard Washington naturally doesn't know, but he is said to be a clever young attorney, who lives in the Windy City and will take his bride there, probably in April.

Another of the recently announced engagements—was it announced in this column or wasn't it?—that of Margaret Britton of Washington and Carroll Robertson of New York, is off. There are no two better known girls in Washington than Margaret and Catherine Britton. Everybody was interested in the announcement of Margaret's engagement, and everybody was equally interested and devoured with curiosity when her father and mother last week sent formal notice to the local newspapers announcing that the wedding would not take place.

So much for the weddings, and now just a word about the clubs. The Playhouse, which is at once a successful and a rather unsuccessful institution, opened its season on Monday. It is rather an exclusive little organization which society wouldn't know how to get along without, but which it certainly does not support generously. Consequently the Playhouse always seems to be dragging out a rather precarious existence. Its entertainments and dances and the various functions held there are always of the smartest. One may be perfectly sure that anything that is going on at the Playhouse will bring out the most exclusive set, but somehow it always seems to be on the verge of bankruptcy.

So far as dancing goes, it has, of course, many, many rivals. The Army and Navy club has its informal but popular dances every Thursday; and on Wednesday and Saturday evenings the Chevy Chase club dances; the Montgomery Country club, the latest addition to smart Washington suburban clubs, will start a series of dances with a ball early in December; there are the weekly hops at Fort Meyer, and there are the Annapolis hops, beloved of the debutante set. There are dances at Dower house, and there is the Lord Baltimore club and the Lock Tavern Inn club, just ready for its formal opening.

ETIQUETTE

By ELIZABETH VAN RENSSELAER.

Any question on etiquette will be answered if you write to Elizabeth Van Rensselaer, "Chicago Sunday Tribune." If you wish a personal reply inclose a stamped, addressed envelope. Please write on one side of the page only.

THERE are people who should know better who have little tricks of manner that make other people uncomfortable. One of these is the habit of sniffing. Some persons with a cold in the head feel justified in sniffing continually and in any company. Even using one's pocket handkerchief vociferously is less unpleasing to listen to than sniffing.

A habit that is disturbing to others is coughing, especially in church. There are many good people who would not willingly annoy any one, yet they take their coughing with them to church and explain, "Yes, I have a simply terrible cold, but I never let anything keep me away if I can help it." I have counted fifty coughs during one sermon, and when I asked the clergyman if these smothered outbursts did not disturb him, he replied that he heard them but endeavored not to notice them. Remaining away from service under these circumstances might be called the sacrifice of the few for the good of the many.

"Dear Miss Van Rensselaer: Kindly tell me how the groom should be attired for an afternoon home wedding; also for an afternoon church wedding. May the bridal veil be omitted for a home wedding, the immediate family only being present?
"B. C. M."

The groom should wear a black cutaway coat, trousers of mixed medium gray or of black with a fine white line, and a pearl colored or pale lavender necktie. If he has not a cutaway and has a frock coat, it will be equally suitable. The bride can perfectly well omit the veil at a small home wedding.

"Dear Miss Van Rensselaer: Will you be kind enough to tell me through THE SUNDAY TRIBUNE the proper way of using knife, fork, teaspoon, and tablespoon—with which hand to use them, right or left.
"ANXIOUS."

Soup spoon, dessert spoon, teaspoon, and knife are held in the right hand. When a meat course is served the knife is in the right and the fork is in the left hand, and it is not correct to lay down the knife, shift the fork to the right hand and use it for eating the food that is cut. Certain separate courses, such as oysters, crab meat, croquettes, and salads are eaten with the fork in the right hand.

New York Society. - - - By Mme. Y.

NEW YORK.—[Special Correspondence.]—Frivol and drivel can no longer be applied by Philistines as descriptive of the women in society. If they waste their substance in "riotous" living, they waste it in good cause, and the living has become serious. But, in fact, one can't label them frivilous and "drivelous," riotous and serious, like so much luggage. They are dancing and dining, teaing and breakfasting, but all to the tune of charity, sweet charity.

Of course, according to Hoyle, the season doesn't officially start until the opening of the opera at the Metropolitan, which comes this year on Nov. 16. But there seems to be no real social dead line between that date and the present. The war is so tremendously terrible and the spirit of youth so perennial that they are meeting on the neutral ground of aid and help.

Next Thursday a calico ball for the benfit of the committee of mercy, which is raising funds for the war sufferers, is to be given in Joan Sawyer's Persian garden. As its name indicates, the guests are to wear cotton costumes as "striking as possible." This committee of mercy is headed by Senator Elihu Root and August Belmont, but the members having in charge the arrangements for the ball are Mrs. Schuyler Van Rensselaer, Frank Crowninshield, Miss Jeannette L. Gilder, Horace C. Stebbins, and Mrs. J. Gordon Douglas.

As I told you last week, the interests and the benefits are divided. Aid has gone to France, to England, to Belgium—O, of course, to Belgium. And now society is looking forward to a Russian festival, which is to be given on the evening of Dec. 1 at the Biltmore, in aid of the Russian war sufferers.

This affair, which is under the direction of Miss Barbara Rutherford and some of her friends, is to be one of the most notable of the winter charity entertainments. I am told that the whole entertainment is to be Russian in spirit. Naturally, when the artists who are to take part are Mme. Alba Nazimova, Efrem Zimbalist, M. Didur, and the Russian Symphony orchestra. Moreover, a new Russian symphony by Scriabine will be played for the first time in this country.

As is customary, the evening will wind up with dancing. Already several dinners have been arranged, among the hostesses being Miss Rutherford's sister, Mrs. Ogden L. Mills; Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney, Mrs. William D. Sloan, and Mrs. James A. Burden Jr. The funds will be sent directly to Russia by the Russian ambassador, who, with his staff, will be present.

Among the debutantes of this week was the daughter of Mrs. Charles Dana Gibson, who presented Miss Irene Gibson at a dinner dance given in the ballroom of the Plaza.

On Friday, Nov. 20, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Damrosch will entertain for their daughter, Miss Gretchen Damrosch, at a dance at the Cosmopolitan club.

A double debut is a distinction not often enjoyed. An interesting one will be that of the Misses Margery and Eugenie Rand, the daughters of Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Ten Broeck Jacquelin. They will make their bow at the Colony club Saturday afternoon, Nov. 28.

As this was election week, many of the house parties which were given at country places over Halloween lasted over election day. The men motored into the city to cast their votes and returned to outdoor sports in the afternoon and to dances in the evening when election returns were received.

As long as there is a perfectly definite date for the launching of the season's ship of society, many people are availing themselves of a between seasons flitting. Mr. and Mrs. Vincent Astor returned from a short trip to England. They brought with them Miss Alice Astor.

Mrs. George J. Gould entertained over the week end at Georgian court, Lakewood, Sir Arthur and Lady Herbert, who have been spending the summer at Newport.

And at Meadow Brook the sound of the horns and the cry of the hounds wake many from their sleep.

News of the Religious World

BY THE REV. W. B. NORTON.

"'To thine own self be true, and it must follow as the night the day thou can'ist not then be false to any man."

THE Presbyterian church within the bounds of the Chicago presbytery has adopted this motto in its application to church work.

Beginning today there is to be a comprehensive and graphic exhibit of Presbyterian churches and institutions with the intent that the Presbyterian church membership shall know its own strength and weakness and shall be able hereafter to more intelligently face its city-wide task.

As all churches of all denominations are aiming at the spiritual and social regeneration of the people and their work is hindered by the same forces and institutions which are working at counter angles to the church, the Presbyterian exhibit will be instructive and interesting to the entire church constituency and church workers of all denominations are invited to inspect the exhibits and enjoy the programs.

The facts on which the exhibit has been built have been gathered under the charge of G. B. St. John. He has been assisted by the students of the McCormick Theological seminary and by many other volunteer and paid workers.

These surveys have covered a half dozen or so centers, the most extensive and thorough of which was the survey of the territory surrounding the Fourth Presbyterian church. A survey now in progress has the Second Presbyterian church, East Twentieth street and South Michigan avenue, as a center. This survey was begun last week. It will require about three months to complete and will utilize the services of twenty-five McCormick seminary students and thirty other workers.. At the close of the canvass and after tabulation of results the Rev. Charles Stelzle of New York will spend two days with the church making recommendations based upon the results of the survey.

◆

The first church at which the exhibit of "Church and City Week" will be given will be the Hyde Park Presbyterian church, Blackstone avenue and Fifty-third street, of which the Rev. Alexander Alison Jr. is pastor. The exercises will open there this evening.

Associated in the Hyde Park center will be the Kenwood Evangelical, Woodlawn, Windsor Park, Brookline, South Chicago, Pullman, and Roseland churches.

6:30 to 7:30 p. m.—Union young people's rally of churches in the group. Walter R. Mee, executive secretary of the Chicago Christian Endeavor society, will preside.

Music—Bohemian young people's chorus. Speakers: The Rev. William E. Parker Jr., the Rev. W. C. Covert, and Miss Helen R. Emmons.

7:30 to 8 p. m.—Intermission for the study of the exhibit.

8 to 9 p. m.—Stereopticon pictures. Speakers: The Rev. W. S. Shirey and the Rev. E. P. Hill.

Tomorrow the exhibit will be open all day for inspection.

On Tuesday the program will begin at 8 o'clock, continuing throughout the evening with music, speaking, and special features of entertainment.

◆

The other centers at which meetings are to be held and the dates of the meetings are:

Nov. 11-12—First church, Grand boulevard and Forty-first street, the Rev. W. C. Covert, pastor. Fifteen churches will unite in this center.

Nov. 13-14—Third church, Ashland boulevard and Ogden avenue, the Rev. Martin D. Hardin, pastor, fourteen churches uniting.

Nov. 15-16—First Presbyterian church, Evanston, Chicago avenue and Lake street, the Rev. David Hugh Jones, pastor. Eleven churches in the group.

Nov. 17-18—Fullerton Avenue church, Fullerton avenue and Hamilton court, the Rev. F. M. Fox, pastor. Twelve churches in the group.

Nov. 18-21—Oak Park, First church, Lake street and Kenilworth avenue, the Rev. G. N. Lucocck, pastor. Nine churches in the group.

At each center the exhibit will be on display from 8 to 10 o'clock p. m. the first day and on the second day from 9 a. m. to 10 p. m.

There is to be no financial solicitation at any of the meetings.

◆

The exhibit, which must be examined with care in order to be of benefit, covers the items of nationality of the persons living in a given community, the number and location of the churches—Protestant, Catholic, and Jewish—the location of libraries, schools, seminaries, social and religious settlements, as well as the saloons, theaters, and dance halls. Where there are factories within the territory surveyed industrial conditions are shown.

◆

The exhibit also includes photographs of every Presbyterian church and every Presbyterian institution within the bounds of the Chicago presbytery., Blank forms were sent to every pastor asking 250 questions covering every phase of the material, spiritual, and social condition of his church, and also of the standing of his church as compared with the other churches in the same community.

◆

Before beginning the independent survey of any community Mr. St. John made a careful study of the reports of the same community made by other agencies or societies such as the Associated Charities, the Juvenile Protective association, and the Chicago Telephone company.

◆

The results of the surveys already available are being used by the coöperative council of city missions, in which six denominations are coöperating. If it is seen, for instance, that a community is populated with a nationality in which any given denomination is working with especial success, this denomination is encouraged to cultivate further the field chosen instead of being made to contend with a rival denomination.

MRS. HANNAH J. PATTERSON

Mrs. Hannah J. Patterson is one of the speakers at the National American Woman suffrage association convention in Nashville, beginning this week. She is state chairman of the woman suffrage party committee of the Pennsylvania Woman Suffrage association.

MRS. W. T. CURRAN

Mrs. W. T. Curran is regent of the Calumet circle of the National Daughters of Isabella. All of the Chicago circles will give a banquet on Thursday at the Hotel Sherman to celebrate the third anniversary of the installation of the Calumet circle, the first branch of the order established in the west.

The Ostrich Plume Industry in South Africa Is Paralyzed

The same situation prevails there as formerly confronted our cotton growers in the South

This store has seen a great opportunity and has taken advantage of it for the benefit of our customers.

$20,000 in Ostrich Plumes, $8,000

Never in the history of retailing have such beautiful plumes—the largest, finest, most costly sort, been offered at such little prices.

1,000 Plumes ($10, $12.50 & $15 Grades), at $5 Each

These are superb feathers; of great length and weight, 4 and 5 ply thick. Black and white. We have never seen such plumes on sale in any store in America for such a price as $5.

1,200 Plumes ($5, $6 and $7 Grades), at $2.50 Each

Selected prime stock. Feathers measuring 18 and 20 inches in length and 9 to 11 inches wide. In black, white and all shades, including shaded and mixed colors. The entire lot at $2.50 each.

1,800 Ostrich Bands ($4 to $6 Grades), at $2 Each

Eight different styles of these bands, each with a plume or fancy novelty stick-up, ready to slip right on the hat. Black, white and all shades, light or dark. These are $4 to $6 pieces, all at $2 each.

The above is a synopsis of the cause back of the most extraordinary Ostrich plume sale ever known in this country.

The Ostrich feather center of the world—South Africa, no longer having the great European market as an outlet for plumes, was compelled to let America take care of their output, with the result that never in the history of the plume industry have such prices been known.

We have taken full advantage of this unprecedented situation, and while most stores have been frantically trying to get rid of their own stocks, we have purchased more than $20,000 worth of plumes at prices not liable to occur again, in this generation at least.

Fine ostrich plumes are very much like diamonds. They have a certain investment value which makes an opportunity of this kind doubly interesting.

The 1,000 plumes we shall sell at $5 are genuine $10, $12.50 and $15 grades. Magnificent pieces of great weight and richness.

And fully as wonderful are the 1,200 plumes at $2.50, which are bona fide $5 to $7 grades. All large, elegant feathers.

And lastly the third group, consisting of 1,800 Ostrich bands of great beauty, which we can sell at $2 each.

Monday should be the greatest plume day ever recorded in the advertising records of State Street. Certainly the plumes and the prices warrant it. Fourth Floor.

Corsets, $3.50 and $7.50

Accompanying cuts show two distinctive models for opposite types of figures. Each one does truly wonderful things for the figure for which it is intended.

The skirt is moderately long, the back very flat, the rubber at either side of the front adds comfort to the wearer, made of strong imported Coutil, price............ $7.50

The model at the right is designed for a tall fully developed figure. You can see how successfully it creates the long slender lines. The bust is easily supported and a firm snugness at the side holds the bust well forward without being raised.

It has a decidedly good hip line, firmly suppressing the hips without bulging, made of soft finest Coutil, price............... $3.50

MISS EDNA MUNSEY in "The Little Cafe".

MISS HELEN WARE in The Revolt.

MISS NORA BAYES at the Majestic.

A Word or Two About the Acting of the Week.

By Percy Hammond.

IT may be that the cause for Mr. Elliott Dexter's inopportune burlesque in "Consequences" was not his own lack of understanding. That he acted the adolescent Jewish progressive in so extravagant a fashion was due, perhaps, to the counsel of a stage director having the customary contempt of the New York showman for the Chicago audience. Rehearsing "Consequences" for the engagement at the Fine Arts, he admonished Mr. Dexter, no doubt, to be obvious. One can hear him say, in substance: "Remember that the Fine Arts theater in Chicago is the headquarters of the esthetic mandarins of that city. There is no one so low-brow as the high-brow when it comes to acting and the drama. So you are to wield the histrionic slapstick. The grotesque attitude, the abnormal manner of speech, are things with which to win the patronage and admiration of that community.

"Stumble over the furniture, shout, burble, gyrate, and be otherwise lunatic. Inflate your impersonation to ludicrous proportions. Forget that the lines and the character are funny enough, and add burlesque to them. You may lose your self-respect as an artist in the process, but you will earn the enconiums of that Caliban of the cities. We shall wound it by sneers at Marie Corelli, perplex it by references to Ferdinand La Salle and Bergson, bore it by the good acting of other members of the cast, and charm it by your maniacal caperings. You shall be our sacrifice to the higher taste of the rude inhabitants of a barbarian vicinity."

Hearkening faithfully to this counsel, Mr. Dexter, in a manner of speaking, spilled the beans. Even the loftiest of the intellects present on the first night deplored his histrionic debauch. Perhaps after becoming acclimated Mr. Dexter will be more temperate in his deportment, and will permit Mr. Rubenstein's amusing satire to have a more symmetrical representation.

The Lady Stars.

Having indicted the New York producers in the preceding paragraphs, one hastens to acquit them in the next. Heaven knows they are guilty, but here are the lady stars with evidence in rebuttal. Miss Helen Ware, Miss Grace George, and Miss Charlotte Walker regard us as not beneath their best efforts, and if they have received evil counsel in New York they decline to follow it in Chicago. There are others, too, of whom as much might be said, but the three mentioned offer the most recent testimony. By attending "The Revolt" at the American music hall you will see Miss Ware in one of her genuine portrayals of a woman who suffers under the selfish injustice of a man. She has played enough of these quietly indignant females to be expert in their impersonation, and expert she is. From the sullen resentment of the first act, through the desperate rebellion of the second, to the battle and victory of the third, with all their varying moods and emotions, it is a sincere and faithful characterization.

Miss George's airy exhibitions of mendacity in "The Truth" and her denotement of their grievous consequences are similarly uncompromising. You will like her in this rôle for the superficial reasons that she is smart, good looking, well dressed, and attractive; and, better, because she subdues the sometimes strident notes of Mr. Fitch's creation with the deft touch of the true comedienne. The fact that good plays are not habitual with Miss George need not impede attendance. "The Truth" is a comedy of quality; it has not "dated" in the least, and it affords an eloquent opportunity for a fine but hitherto unlucky player.

In the Hogarthian Mr. Walter's idea of a Pittsburgh rake's progress, "The Better Way," Miss Walker's errors are not premeditated. She is beautifully in earnest in this drama, and her appealing eagerness to be honestly its melancholy heroine tempers an expression of the opinion that she is not—at least not always. It seems to me that it would be easy for Miss Walkers to be a good actress. She is a good actress, I think, save for her propensity for aeolian utterance. The lovely but unveracious cadences of her voice are sweet to the ear, but they belong in opera. Every time you begin to be convinced that Mrs. Stanley is a human being trying to win her dissipated mill hand-millionaire back to a life of decorum a concert intervenes. Improvement in this respect is to be noted in Miss Walker's present performance, and it may be that, when she returns, the lyric elements in her vocal equipment will be still less obtrusive.

Items of News.

George C. Tyler, producer of the dramatization of "David Copperfield" called "The Highway of Life," expresses the opinion that it is the "last dramatization of Dickens which will be made for many years." What he probably means is the last which will be acknowledged by the playwrights as dramatization of Dickens, from whose novels uncounted scenes, situations, episodes, and characters have been bodily lifted by the majority of American and English playwrights of the last twenty-five years. There are copious extracts from Dickens in at least three of the plays now on view in Chicago.

De Wolf Hopper's appetite for Gilbert and Sullivan seemingly grows by what it feeds on. To a fellow enthusiast of Chicago the comedian recently addressed this impassioned letter: "Why is it that you never sicked me on to 'The Grand Duke'? Was it just because the ivory crowned custodians of the American stage never took the trouble to import the opera? I've just been through the book for the fourth time in one week, and hereby go on record as regarding it the equal of anything Gilbert ever wrote. If, when I hear the music—I've had to send all the way to London to get a score—I find that Sullivan did his part as well, me for 'The Grand Duke' just as soon as I get 'The Yeomen of the Guard' under way. I'm willing to admit that Gilbert slipped a cog when he wrote 'Utopia Limited,' but all six cylinders were hitting when he turned out 'The Grand Duke.'"

Miss Pauline Frederick is to play Zaza, Miss Marie Doro is to resume her old part in "The Morals of Marcus," Tyrone Power will take up Wilton Lackaye's original part of Jefferson Stockton in "Aristocracy," and Miss Marguerite Clarke will go into "The Love Route"—all for the films.

Miss Annette Kellermann is to have a musical comedy for herself. Mrs. Anna Caldwell O'Dea is to write it and Victor Herbert compose it.

Miss Dazie, the dancer, is another performer eager to speak rather than merely display lines, so she, too, goes into musical comedy—one called "Lady Luxury," which recently had a tryout in Detroit. Mrs. Rida Johnson Young wrote it, so it is being fixed up.

A patriotic revue in course of preparation for the Empire in London is called "By Jingo if We Do!" Miss Kathleen Clifford will be present in it.

Cinema as First Aid to Injured Drama.

By Burns Mantle.

NEW YORK.—[Special Correspondence.]—Realizing in their sluggish wisdom that what cannot be cured should be endured, the producers of plays now seek to profit from the interest the "movies" have aroused.

In no less than five of the current Broadway entertainments there are "pictorial interludes" by means of which the cinema picks up the plot where the acted drama leaves it and carries it forward to where the dramatis personæ is prepared to resume the burden.

In "The Battle Cry," which is the newest of melodramas, being an adaptation from Charles Neville Buck's recent novel of that title credited to though unacknowledged by Augustus Thomas, the moving picture is a very important feature of the production.

By its use in the third act the heroine is permited to kill four fighting feudists before the eyes and ears of the audience without shock to the most sensitive tympani in the house. The fight itself is also spread over several acres of ground by the use of the pictures, where it would necessarily have been confined to the narrow limits of the stage under ordinary conditions.

Those who have read "The Battle Cry" will recall it as the romance of a gentle Philadelphian who invaded the Cumberland mountains with the avowed intention of civilizing its feud fighting inhabitants. She plans to open a school and by educating the children gradually bring about the regeneration of the entire community.

In the way of her success stands "Bad Anse" Havey, leader of the fighting Haveys. "Bad Anse" is perfectly willing that she should proceed as impulse and conscience dictate, but he warns her that before she conquers the spirit of the mountain she herself will be conquered. Being a handsome and rugged specimen of Kentucky caveman and awfully strong, the school teacher is considerably impressed. So much so that by the time the third act has been reached she admits that she is quite helpless to resist the love he offers her, and sinks cheerfully into his encircling arms.

But, hark! What was that?

'Twas neither the nightingale nor the lark, my dears. It was the McBriars, feud enemies of the Haveys, sneaking through the underbrush to get a shot at "Bad Anse" when he started home.

Then the fight begins. In the pictures you see Havey leave the cottage and the McBriar gang stalk him as he goes. Suddenly they open fire, wounding him apparently in a dozen or more places. Painfully he crawls back to the cottage. The pictures disappear and you see the girl let him in, blood soaked and apparently dying. At that sight she is changed from a peace loving Quaker to a "fighting Havey." They will "get" him, will they? She barricades her doors, drags out the loaded rifles she had induced the reformed feudist to leave with her, and when she is called upon to surrender her lover replies with a bullet that "gets" the gentleman doing the calling. The pictures again take up and continue the fight. You see her kill four of the attacking crowd, the fifth and last one being saved for the final scene, which is acted. Her ammunition gone, the last of the gang is about to enter the cottage when "Bad Anse" rolls over on his back and punctures the intruder with a revolver bullet.

In Rose Stahl's new play, written by Rennold Wolf and Channing Pollock, the title being "A Perfect Lady," Rose is the queen of an all but stranded burlesque troupe. For several seasons her shapely limbs have been the props that have sustained both the répertoire and the fly-by-night flights of "The Merry Models." But when they want her to play the town in which her innocent little sister is attending a young women's seminary she balks. Sister thinks she is "one of them Shakspearean stars, playing Ophelia in 'As You Like It.'"

Leaving the troupe on the station platform at Sycamore, Kas., she takes the orchestra leader and one of the soubretes of "The Merry Models" and opens an ice cream cabaret. Here, with the aid of moving pictures of the Castles, she teaches the Sycamoreans to tango. When the churchgoing element threatens to drive her out of town she counters by marrying the village parson. Which she rightfully considers something of a personal triumph.

Heggie, now playing Uriah Heep in "The Highway of Life," in New York, is to have the title part in Miss Grace Heyer's play, "The Philosopher," scheduled for January production by the Liebler company, and will take the part of the conjuror in the special performances of G. K. Chesterton's "Magic," announced by that firm. He may be identified by Chicago playgoers as the actor of the starving brother in "The New Sin" two years ago.

The manager of "Experience," George V. Hobart's elaboration of the like-named "morality" acted in the Lambs' gambol last May, sent a circular letter to Charles Dillingham. The letter explained that the manager sought indorsements of "Experience" from prominent persons and asked that Mr. Dillingham give his impressions of the play "in just a sentence." He did, this being just the sentence: "In reply to your letter I would say that 'Experience' has taught me that the best show in town is my production of 'Chin-Chin.'"

Joseph Coyne, idle because of London's inactivity in a theatrical way, is back in the United States. He does not expect to play while in the country and says that on his return to London he will appear in the Frank McIntyre part in "A Pair of Sixes."

Miss Valeska Suratt is to be filmed for photoplays. Her contract provides, first, that she shall be seen only in "modern society plays," and, second, that she shall not be called upon to perform "hazardous feats."

Miss Marjorie Rambeau, an actress who proved engaging when seen with Willard Mack in a brief sketch in a Majestic theater bill not long ago, is to have the chief part in that actor-author's "So Much for So Much." She is, off the stage, Mrs. Mack. His "Kick In" is credited with being one of the successes of the season in New York.

Another play about crooks and crime, "Big Jim Garrity," was taken off last evening, leaving John Mason again without employment. This is the play for which a dollar was made the cost of the best seats in the belief that the public was objecting to the standard $2 price.

Miss Florence Macbeth, who sang here last season with the Chicago Grand Opera company, has joined the Century organization and will remain with it for its Chicago engagement. Another ex-member of the Chicago forces, Miss Helen Stanley, also returns with the Century company.

Joseph Brooks is not permitting his separation from Klaw and Erlanger to interfere with his activities as a producer. George V. Hobart will dramatize Miss Edna Ferber's stories, "Roast Beef Medium" and "Buttered Side," for him, and he is now looking for an actress to portray Emma MacChesney. Miss Helen Lackaye, Miss Jane Peyton, and Miss Louise Dresser are regarded as most suited to the character.

If the war doesn't cause a change in Harry Lauder's plan to go to South Africa early in the new year, it will be two years before he will be seen again in Chicago after his forthcoming engagement. It is told of him that he has been offered and refused London bookings in the several big music halls that would keep him in that city continuously for fourteen months.

Having launched Miss Elsie Ferguson in "Outcast," Hubert Henry Davies has returned to London to enlist in the army. C. Heddon Chambers and Henry Arthur Jones accompanied him and will also begin military duty, Mr. Chambers as interpreter in the field, and Mr. Jones as an armed constable in London.

When Richard Harding Davis' play, "The Trap," is revived for New York Robert Edeson, Tully Marshall, Orrin Johnson, and Miss Elaine Hammerstein will be among the actors.

A bungalow, the property of Miss Peggy O'Neill of "Peg o' My Heart," was burned last week at Crystal Beach, near Fort Erie, Ont.

HELEN WARE, VIOLINIST.

Three young Chicagoans appear in concert tomorrow — Ludwig Schmidt, violinist, assisting Rosa Olitzka at the Illinois; Carol Robinson, pianist, at the Fine Arts theater, and Marie Edwards, pianist, at the Blackstone. With Miss Edwards is Miss Helen Ware, interpreter of Hungarian and Slavic airs. Mr. Clark sings with the Amateur Musical club tomorrow afternoon.

The Century Opera Company Busy Preparing Chicago Minds for Its Advent On November Twenty-third.

By Ronald Webster.

THE Century Opera company, that matter of fact organization which does not encourage temperament among its principals, is busy preparing Chicago minds for its advent on Nov. 23.

It would be easy for the Century company to shout about its virtue as a promoter of civic good taste, as a rescuer from operaless winter. Thus far it has not talked about any of these almost transcendental functions, and has confined itself to telling where and for how much it will be possible to hear opera in English.

One other move has been made, at that. Realizing that those in Chicago will appreciate the singers much more if they are acquainted with them, the company has sent convenient biographies of a thousand words each or less, from which I venture to cull a few of the choicer facts.

Kathleen Howard, contralto. — "A sketch of Miss Howard's career, however brief, would be incomplete if it did not include a history of her lineage. She comes from the famous family of Howard who centuries ago were constituted the Dukes of Norfolk, the primal ducal house of England. Through Sir Thomas More she is a direct descendant of Edward VI., and traces her ancestry in unbroken lines through the Black Prince to Charlemagne the Great."

Thomas Chalmers, baritone.—"His ancestry is purely colonial, and he is an American in thought, ideals, and education to the most profound degree." It is also stated that Thomas Edison declares Chalmers to possess "one of the twelve scientifically perfect voices in the world."

Harry Williamson, tenor.—A coal miner, then a stone mason, then tenor in "Romeo and Juliet" and other operas.

Jacques Coini, stage director.—"Has had a career replete with artistic events." While director of the Royal opera house in Amsterdam he gave a performance of "Parsifal," thus barring himself from Bayreuth. It was the first performance ever given outside of Bayreuth.

Henry Weldon, basso.—"Mr. Weldon is the son of Admiral A. J. Hughes of the United States navy, and, despite his European education, is a thorough American. It was during his engagement in Brussels "that he discarded the name of Hughes and assumed that of Weldon because of the difficulty the French found in pronouncing the former."

Agide Jacchia, conductor.—"His triumphs in Central America were extraordinary and he was commissioned to write the national hymn of the United States of Central America by the president of Guatemala."

Alfred Kaufman, basso.—"Born in the shadow of the famous Durham cathedral. With John McCormick as a fellow student he studied in Milan."

There are many more such details, all of large value in impressing the singers upon us. And interesting, too, much more than foreign "triumphs" and distinguished successes.

Cut This Out.

TODAY—Rose Olitzka, contralto; Ludw Schmidt, violin, Illinois. Carol Robinson, Fin Arts theater. Marie Edwards, piano; Hele Ware, violin, Blackstone.

MONDAY—Amateur Musical club—Herbe Miller, baritone, Germania theater.

NOV. 15—Fannie Bloomfield Zeisler, piano, Illinois theater.

NOV. 22—Kneisel quartet, Illinois theater Ferruccio Busoni, piano, Orchestra hall. Glenn Dillard Gunn and Allen Spencer in two piano recitals, Fine Arts theater.

NOV. 29—Alma Gluck, soprano, Orchestr hall.

DEC. 3—Popular concert, Chicago Symphon orchestra, Orchestra hall.

DEC. 6—John MacCormack, tenor, Auditorium. Nikolai Sokoloff, violin, Illinois theater. Luella Chilson-Ohrman, Fine Arts theater, evening.

DEC. 13—Carl Friedberg, piano, Illinois theater.

"Only one funnel." Emmy Destinn i credited with having exclaimed when sh saw the ship which was to carry her bac to the United States. "Ah, how diffe ent, when I always travel on ships wi at least three!"

At the Gunn-Spencer two piano recit of Nov. 22 two novelties, a "Benedictus by Alkan and a concert piece by Rav are to be played.

Mrs. Edward MacDowell lectures a Music hall, Northwestern university, o Nov. 17.

Marcella Sembrich will make four appearances this winter in this country—two in New York and one each in Boston and Chicago. Her Chicago recital is scheduled for Jan. 8 at Orchestra hall.

Twenty-five Chicago Symphony players form Arthur Dunham's Sunday evening orchestra at Sinai temple. The first concert is to be given next Sunday. The orchestra players spend their Sundays profitably; some of them at the Hebrew institute concerts, others [illegible] hall afternoon concerts. I am told also that three members are engaged every Sunday morning to play chamber music with a wealthy Chicagoan whose enjoyment in fiddling compensates for his lack of technical equipment.

Emma Lucy Gates, one of the many granddaughters of the Mormon leader Brigham Young, is uncertain about accepting an invitation by cable from Germany to sing at the kaiser's Royal Opera house at Cassel.

Efrem Zimbalist, Alma Gluck's husband, according to a story probably emanating from a publicity agent, spent his entire honeymoon in a dentist's chair.

A man named Frank Merrick, "distinguished English pianist," gave a concert at Manchester, England, not long ago, the program including a set of variations with fugue, a sonata, and a Spanish suite, all for two pianos. The names of the composers were not on the program. To add to the discomfiture of critics, the promoters of the program announced that the names would be announced in a local paper a week after the performance. What the critics did is not recorded.

The Sunday Evening Club quartet—Mabel Sharp Herdien, Rose Lutiger Gannon, John B. Miller, and Gustaf Holmquist—will sing "Still, Still with Thee," by Foote, as the offertorium at the meeting of the club to be held at Orchestra hall tonight. The organ program by Mrs. Katharine Howard-Ward will include the overture to "William Tell" by Rossini, "Meditation" and "Toccata" by d'Evry, and the march from "The Queen of Sheba" by Gounod; "Mount Carmel," by Foote, will be sung by the women's chorus, and the choir of 100 will sing two anthems, "Sing a Song of Praise," by West, and "Comes at Times a Stillness," by Woodward.

The second of the Chicago Symphony orchestra series of "popular" concerts will be given in Orchestra hall on Thursday evening, Dec. 3. In accordance with the plans for reaching a clientele other than the regular concert going public arrangements have been made through the Civic Music association and the City club for the placing of the tickets on sale at the following places:

Hull house.
University of Chicago settlement.
Lewis institute.
Chicago School of Civics.
Maxwell street settlement.
Fellowship house, 831 West Thirty-fifth place.
Butler house, Broadway and Belmont.
Chicago commons, 955 West Grand avenue.
Y. W. C. A., 427 South Ashland avenue.
Y. M. C. A., west side division, 1515 West Monroe street.
Y. M. C. A., north side division, 1621 West Division street.
Y. M. C. A., South Chicago community, 9113 Commercial avenue.
Y. M. C. A., Hyde Park branch, 1400 East Fifty-third street.
Henry Booth house, 701 West Fourteenth place.
Bohemian Settlement house, 1831 South Racine avenue.
Eli Bates House, 621 West Elm street.
Christopher house, 1618 Fullerton avenue.
J. W. Boggs, Armour soap works, 3130 Benson street.
Indiana house, 19 East Grand avenue.
Young Women's Boarding home, 51 West Delaware place, conducted by the Salvation Army.

Mme. Julia Claussen is not to sing here this afternoon, as announced several weeks ago. The hasty conclusion of a press representative was responsible for the error. She will sing, however, on Nov. 22 as soloist at the Auditorium for the benefit of the German-Austro-Hungarian Relief society of Chicago.

In Carl Friedberg, the pianist, who made his debut in New York last Monday, the concert world may prepare for long hair and, to quote a reviewer, "a pallor of imagined sufferings." I believe he is to play in Chicago later in the season.

The most pretentious concert of the Amateur Musical club's season is to be given tomorrow afternoon in Orchestra hall, with Amy Emerson Neill and Charles W. Clark as soloists. The program is:

Sacchini	Mon fils tu ne l'est plus
Gretry	Songe Enchanteur
Gretry	De ma barque légère
Gretry	Laisse en paix le dieu des Combats
Sinding	Capriccios 1 and 2

[Mr. Sinding intrusted the first public performance of these Capriccios to Miss Neill.]

Noren	Legende
Noren	Slavischer Tanz
Massenet	Aria, "Vision Fugitive."
Franz	Es hat die Rose sich beklagt
Franz	Aus meinen grossen Schmerzen
Bungert	Der Sandträger
Hollaender	Die Ablösung
Sinding	Fuge
Tschaikowsky	Concert B major, 1st movement
Dunham	The Pilgrimage
Homer	Uncle Rome
Schindler	Scorned Love
Schindler	The fairest one of all the stars
Campbell-Tipton	Fool's Soliloquy

Mr. Clark is another of the war refugees, but, thank heaven, he has not listed for publication all of the contracts in "royal" theaters he has been obliged to cancel.

At its concerts to be given in Orchestra hall next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, the Chicago Symphony orchestra—Frederick Stock, conductor—will introduce to the patrons of the orchestra a soloist new to the American concert field, in Frank Gittelson, an American violinist. Mr. Gittelson is a native of Philadelphia, and although still a young man has met with remarkable success in European music centers. For the concerts of this week he has elected to be heard in the Brahms Violin Concerto in D major, Opus 77. The program also includes Chabrier's Overture to "Gwendoline," Debussy's Gigues from "L'Images," and Tschaikowsky's Symphony No. 4 in F minor.

A concert for the benefit of the widow of Chevalier N. B. Emanuel will be given next Sunday afternoon in the Auditorium under the joint auspices of the Chicago Grand Opera company, which has donated the theater and is managing the affair, and the Chicago Federation of Musicians, 100 of whom—picked orchestra men of Chicago, it is said—have combined into a special orchestra. They have started rehearsals of the program under the direction of Gregor Skolnik, who was for part of last season concertmeister of the Chicago Grand Opera company. Leon Marx, who was engaged as this season's assistant concertmeister of the opera company, will play the Meditation intermezzo of "Thais." Miss Jenny Dufau has telegraphed to say that she will sing and it is expected that Mme. Julia Claussen, also, will be among the afternoon's soloists.

Contracts have at length been signed between the Chicago Grand Opera company and William A. Brady, De Wolf Hopper's manager, whereby the comedian and his company will come in January to the Auditorium for three weeks of Gilbert and Sullivan. The deal was all but consummated some weeks ago, when it was tossed in the air through the decision of the Century Opera company to make a Chicago season of eight weeks, instead of the six weeks originally planned. Mr. Hopper's chief "novelty" will be a revival of "The Yeomen of the Guard," which has not been professionally sung in this city for twenty years or more. Oddly enough, it has ranked hardly second to "The Mikado" in London popularity, and is frequently revived there. Hopper is said to be infatuated with the character of Jack Point, the strolling jester; and the part will have, of course, adequate musical treatment with him as the singer. To Jack falls part of one of the loveliest of Sullivan's melodies, "I Have a Song to Sing, O!"

Will War Hurt or Help Suffrage Cause?

By Marion Walters Lovett.

WHAT effect will the war in Europe have upon the suffrage movement? The European man's war has forced the suffrage cause into the background. In this country, on the other hand, woman's war over methods of securing federal legislation has brought the movement into tion has brought the movement into forced prominence, and it is said this was one of the contributing causes to the widespread defeat of the suffrage measure in the eleven states that voted on it last Tuesday. Will the obscurity in Europe prove as deadly in its effect as the forced prominence here?

MRS. JAMES W. MORRISON

THE TRIBUNE here presents the opinions of women thoroughly conversant with the suffrage movement in Europe and also in America:

Mrs. Pethick Lawrence, the leader of the Woman's Political union in England, an oragnization numbering many thousands of conservative militants, has arrived in New York to aid in giving the 1915 referendum campaign in that state a brilliant inauguration. Mrs. Lawrence says:

"Feminism in England or elsewhere will not receive a setback through this war. I think that German supremacy would not mean a setback to feminism, because, for one thing, feminism is an undamable flood. Secondly, Germany, contrary to the conception of many, has a very wide and extraordinarily efficient feminism of its own, which perhaps differs from English manifestations of modernity, but is not less strong or less admirable on that account.

"Germany, since the advent of the war, has naturally been accused by England of being a menace to the advance of feminism, but the problem of the German women is very different from that facing the English women. The women of each are traveling toward the same goal, but by opposite routes.

"I do not at all agree with the opinion that German women are behindhand in valuable efforts. That they have accomplished so many of the practical things for which women want the vote is due to their government, which allows them much leeway in these matters.

"That they have done less toward the achievement of enfranchisement is due also to their government, which is treating them with remarkable, wily wisdom. For it is killing the vote with kindness. It allows them to do so much that the women haven't much time to think of the vote—they have at hand more pressing matters. And in addition the vote is not for them a crying need; they can get along without it for the present.

"But this temporary stifling will not avail for long, for soon the German movement will draw a deep breath and find, when it starts more earnest efforts for the ballot, that it has accomplished a great deal during its seemingly docile period.

"Germany's feminism expresses itself in a fundamentally different way from ours and yours. These women are combining, first of all, in the interest of motherhood, of child health and welfare, and of unprotected girlhood. They are enlarging the 'home.' It was primarily the interest of 'kinder and küche' that caused them to meet.

"In the matter of social reforms, these women have done an enormous amount of good. The government has given them enormous scope for their efforts. They may 'meddle' and instigate reforms. The whole sex is splendidly looked out for in the land's laws. So they need not work and campaign in order to be permitted to do their own tasks.

"In England the government has not only refused women the vote; it has also hindered us in other ways. We see terrible wrongs and gross necessities, but can do nothing. We see a law, instituted by a lord bishop of London, to raise the age of consent from 16 to 18 fail, and can do nothing.

"English women are bitterly aware of ,000,000 other things that need their intervention. We are not soothed, and pacified, and privileged like the Germans; therefore, we must fight for what we want—we must make a political issue of what we want." But when Mrs. Lawrence says "fight" she explains that to her the term means only the customary political pestering of people as a means of attainment.

Miss Jane Addams, the first vice president of the National American Suffrage association, and formerly an officer of the International Woman's Suffrage alliance, says:

"The war will inevitably retard the progress of the woman's suffrage movement.

"With every able-bodied man off to the front, the women of France and Germany have taken up and are capably carrying on man's 'business.' There are women police, women tram conductors and subway operators, and women postmen. Women till the fields and carry the produce to market.

"In addition to man's work the women are taking care of their traditional duties. Never has there been more sewing and knitting done, never more nursing.

"The performance of this double duty will develop woman's power and efficiency. When the women again have the time and opportunity to turn their attention to getting the vote they will have proven themselves fit and worthy of full political rights."

Mrs. James W. Morrisson, the secretary of the Chicago Equal Suffrage association, spent the summer in England and France and returned to the United States after the war had broken in Europe. Mrs. Morrisson is most hopeful of the situation of women after the war is over.

"The war in Europe," she says, "will do for the women there just what the civil war did for the women of the United States. In other words, the women are already taking the places of men. With the terrible slaughter that is going on it is inevitable that the women will have to continue to do men's work as well as their own after the war is over."

Mrs. John F. Bass, who left Austria for America just two weeks before war was started, has had unusual opportunities to study women in war times. Mrs. Bass was in Constantinople during the massacre of 1896 and in China during the "Boxer" uprising. During the Russo-Japanese war she studied the activities of the women at Chi-fu. Three times Mrs. Bass has been to the Balkan states. Winter before last she found the women forming "circles"—they do not yet call them clubs—and becoming interested in city welfare.

"Ten years ago," says Mrs. Bass, "they were most apathetic. They took no interest in any question of civic or social reform."

Mrs. Bass continues: "The war in Europe will inevitably result in a distinct gain for the women. It cannot help but dawn upon the men how immensely capable their women are.

"The women now are assuming heavy burdens and taking upon themselves the work that was considered as man's before the war. The efficiency of the women will inevitably dawn upon the men. The men will then understand that political equality is their women's right."

Every day another Jack Horner sticks his thumb into this inexhaustible world-pie and pulls out an unsuspected plum, but there are still very few pioneers among us proportionate to numbers.

Most folks don't know how to use themselves to their own and universal advantage and thereby humanity and the individual both lose advantages that could be seized if each of us would recognize the enormous potentialities in everybody.

Once in a while "accident" reveals opportunities but it isn't accident that turns them to account.

Things don't keep on happening with regularity and system unless there's a combination of skill and will promoting the enterprise.

Look at it any way you please, there's a revealing force at the elbow of all originality.

If you prefer to be colloquial, call it "hunch"; but the most autocratic of beings isn't entirely automatic.

There's an unseen power that makes the wheels of thought turn to originality. There's a silent, invisible presence assisting all advancement.

Names are just make-shift tags to identify facts, emotions, and happenings. We've gradually evolved a bookful of oral and printed symbols with which to translate our ideas and included in our vocabulary are such words as "Hope" and "Confidence" and "Optimism" and "Courage" and the like. Who denies their existence? Yet even the indefatigable gentlemen who weigh stars and dissect atmosphere and count atoms can't prove by any physical agency that they are definite.

And it's just so with faith. You must believe or you can't do; you must feel sure or you can't achieve.

If your brain can contemplate a possibility, you've had a message from out of the unknown; so set about transforming the vague hint into a concrete performance.

All that you have and use came into existence by the same route Before its creation the notion of a wheel was as astounding in the generation which had never beheld one as the creation of a thousand story building seems to the twentieth century.

Chemically and anatomically the inhabitants of the earth are of standard construction and composition—a lot of machines built on one unvarying pattern. We may run a little odd in sizes and color but in all important details we're "all there."

The TRIBUNE'S WEEKLY ALMANACK

November

The Wild Goose.

IN the yellow light of the hunter's moon the wild geese have come out of northern lakes seeking southern sedges in wedge caravans seen darkly at night in the amber hazed sky or with every detail of outstretched neck and strong wing in the early daylight.

The cry of the goose overhead at night starts something primitive in the housed creature of modern life. The wild goose is at once alien and intimate, alien to what is and intimate to what was, and that part of the housed creature's life which is imagination so vital as to be almost recollection starts as if to a familiar but not frequently heard summons.

It's a summons to a life of individual independence, of escape from communism, of return to the direct commissary; to a life when the daily work brought the daily food. The housed creature may not look towards the corner or the mantelpiece for a gun, but he's apt to go out and look into the sky and have vague sensations that he and not the wild goose is out of environment.

Fair feeding and good weather will tempt the flocks of geese to break their flight, seeking the lake in early morning and the marshes to the west at night, and thus for a period, terminated by the instinct of the goose, we have the faint but alluring summons to get away from steam heat and electric light. We courageously resist and return to the radiator.

Martinmas comes; new wines are drawn off the lees and tasted, the goose of the barnyard is fat, the fat ox is ready for the slaughter, the smoke house for its meats. Pagan joys of the flesh pots invite folk whose harvest is in.

PALACE.

"I tried to give a reading from Shakespeare in a moving picture show——"

"And they were all asleep at the end of your act?"

"No, not all of them. One fellow was awake; he hissed me."

"But, my dear, you have a heart of gold to be so interested in an old fellow."

"Huh! If I had a heart of gold I would have hocked it."

Mr. Stevens in "Grandpa's Birthday":

"I'm 91 today, and I'm good for another thirty years."

"And I have a birthday present for you, grandpa."

"I know what it is; it's another muffler. I got twenty-seven of them last birthday."

"No, it's a rocking chair."

"Why didn't you get me a bicycle?"

"Why was I discharged? I'm a good musician."

"It's your own fault."

"Why is it my own fault?"

"When you play you blemish the notes. Now sound A A, not H."

"O!"

"No, A."

"Do you want A on the staff?"

"I want A in the horn."

"You want A in the horn?"

"Musically speaking, A is inside, but you must make it out. Play this now and give each and every note its full value. Don't try to exchange two quarter notes for a half note."

"Is it a solo?"

"Yes and no. You could not exactly put it in the class of solos, but it is a sort of ingrown cadenza."

"That isn't in the music, that note."

"That's my mistake. It's a fly; I thought it was a note."

"I am a doctor."

"If you are a doctor, how does it happen that old Tumpkins died from heart trouble when you were treating him for liver trouble?"

"It's a lie. When I treat a man for liver trouble, he dies of liver trouble."

Fred Dupree, "the international comedian": There's no use talking, but it always falls to the lot of a poor suffering monologist to follow turns that would defeat most any other kind of an act.

To follow or precede a troupe of trained elephants or lions is nothing and many brilliant points are wasted on air just because a lion will let out a roar or an elephant trumpet just at that critical moment when the auditors are ready to receive the point of a joke.

I have followed trained ponies so often that nowadays I can't go to sleep unless I'm in a livery stable, and mother told me never to follow the horses. One week I had to follow a troupe of trained goats. It was a very strong act. The man who owned the troupe had eight goats. By Wednesday he had nine. He must have had a hard time training nine—it was that wild.

Another week I followed a troupe of trained fleas. When I opened my engagement I had a single act, but by Thursday I had a production. The owner of the act called it a flea circus, and they had a circus with me all right. While not exactly athletically inclined, I managed to keep on the jump. Those fleas were fond of me and signified their intention of making a permanent home with me, but the following week they laid down their arms and deserted. It was the week I was on the bill with Mme. Isabella's educated canines, and my poor fleas went to the dogs.

But the limit was reached when I followed Consul the monk. I got sore at him at once because he not only smoked a cigar in his act the same as I did, but he smoked the same brand. I complained to the manager about it, and he said: "Rot, he doesn't smoke the same brand you do. The brand you smoke would kill an ordinary monk, I suppose," he continued, "the monkey copied the idea of his high hat from you also?" I said: "No, Oscar Hammerstein beat him to it." Then I asked him if he wouldn't permit me to go on ahead of the monk. He said: "What's the odds if you are on ahead of him or after him—the audience will never know the difference. You stay where you are and act as human as you can. Consul is the headliner here, and I can't have your monkey shines interfere with his."

So there you are. Next week, I understand, I am to be on the bill with a troupe of trained oysters. If they get fresh with me I'll eat up the troupe.

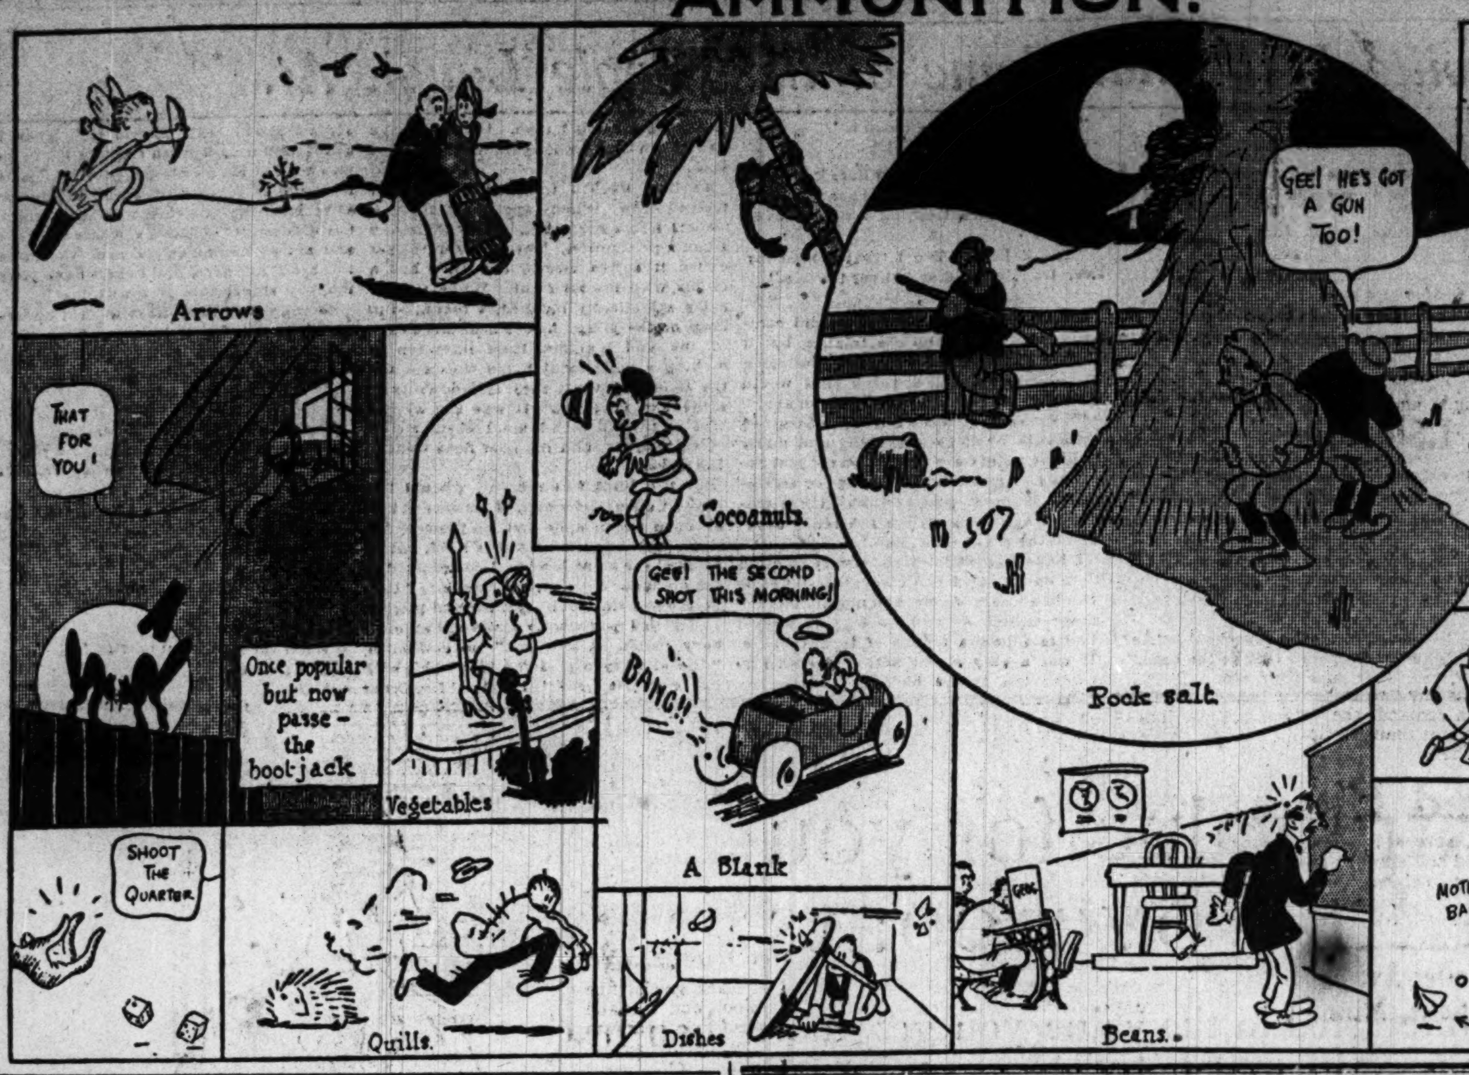
AMMUNITION.



The Versatile Mrs. Dobyns.

MRS. FLETCHER DOBYNS

Mrs. Fletcher Dobyns is known for many activities. Now it is charity, now as a summer sportswoman, now as a songstress, and very often as a worker in the cause of suffrage. Here she is shown as she stood reading the ballot on last Tuesday preparatory to voting. Mrs. Dobyns, was Miss Winifred Starr, oldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Merritt Starr of Kenilworth, and her romance of a few years ago is such that it may bear repetition without losing its freshness. She had been home from Europe, where she had been studying music (she possesses a high, sweet soprano voice) for just a little while when her father came before the public as counsel in a noted legal case. His opponent was a young lawyer—Fletcher Dobyns—who not only won the case but the daughter of his opponent as well, for the betrothal of Miss Starr and Mr. Dobyns followed within a few weeks after the close of the case. Yearly Mr. and Mrs. Dobyns go up into the north woods for a fortnight or more of hunting, fishing, canoeing, and woodland life, in which Mrs. Dobyns takes as keen a delight as does her husband. She has been active in the suffrage movement also.

British-American Club Aiding War Sufferers.

Clothing, medicine, money, and other necessities for the relief of British war sufferers are being collected by the British-American Woman's club, formerly the woman's auxiliary of the British Empire association. Mrs. W. F. Dickson president of the club, has announced that several hundred dollars in money has already been collected, together with a large consignment of clothing. Half of this will be sent to Mrs. William Boyd at Edinburgh, Scotland, a sister of Mrs. John Crerar of Chicago. The other half will go to Madame Joseph Guedy at Lyons, France, a sister of Mrs. William A. Jackson. Several benefit parties will be given to raise money for the fund.

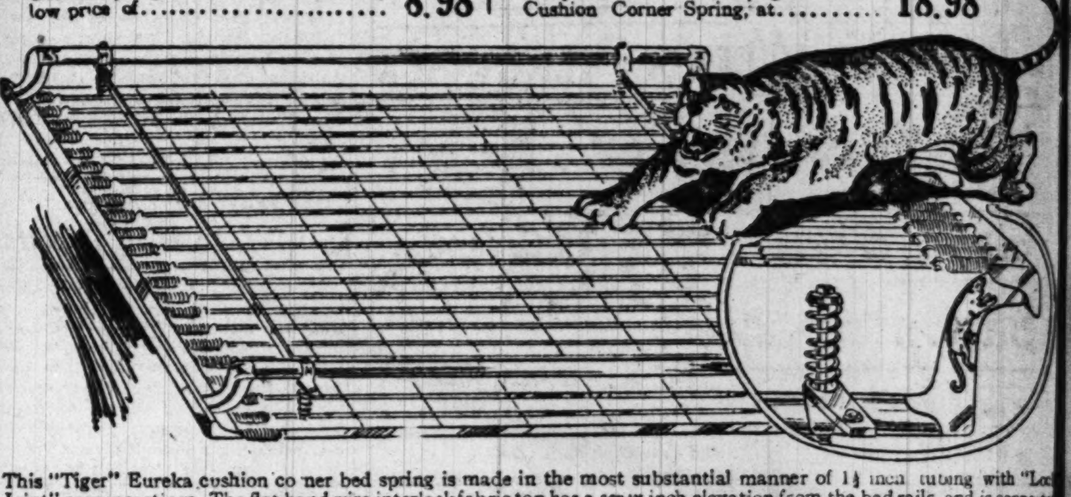
A "Tiger" Eureka Cushion Corner Bed Spring With Every Brass Bed We Sell Tomorrow—And Why

Ninth Floor

Here is one of the most unusual and extraordinary offerings that Chicago has ever had—how to bring the "Tiger" Eureka Cushion Corner Bed Springs to the attention of all Chicago quickly—and quickly have folks talk of its many merits was the question—and so it was decided to give one to every customer of the Boston Store who bought a brass bed on Monday, November 9th, and we gladly agree to do this, for the "Tiger" Eureka Cushion Corner Bed Spring is sold here and at most stores in America for $7.50. Think of it, a $7.50 bed spring of the highest grade, absolutely without cost. As to prices of brass beds, they, just as all other merchandise, always cost least here. If you need to be convinced, price brass beds tomorrow before coming here—We mention but two of the many bargains for you to judge by. Remember for the "Tiger" Eureka Cushion Corner Spring no charge will be made tomorrow.

2 inch colonial guaranteed lacquer brass beds, with five heavy fillers at both head and foot ends—see what this splendid bed sells for elsewhere—our price—specially marked for tomorrow's selling, with a 7.50 "Tiger" Eureka Cushion Corner Spring, at the very remarkably low price of.................... 8.98

Continuous brass tube beds, guaranteed lacquer, 2½ in. posts, five 1½ inch fillers in the head and foot ends, height of bed 60 inches, beautifully trimmed, equipped with steel rails, let others show you such a bed and compare prices. Remember tomorrow complete with a 7.50 "Tiger" Eureka Cushion Corner Spring, at......... 18.98



This "Tiger" Eureka cushion corner bed spring is made in the most substantial manner of 1¼ inch tubing with "Lock Joint" corner castings. The flat band wire interlock fabric top has a seven inch elevation from the bed rails, and is connected to the frame of spring with 54 helical oil tempered steel springs, besides there are the four patented cushion corners as illustrated above with the clever adjustable projections that fasten the spring tightly to the bed. The slightest pressure on the spring immediately brings into action the added elasticity and flexibility of the Cushion Corners, making this by far the most comfortable spring made, and also a spring that can never sag. It responds to every move noiselessly, letting you lie in any position with comfort and always springing back to its original position. No bed spring ever made can give you as much real rest—finished in the very best manner, no sharp corners to catch or tear the bed clothes, no dust catching crevasses, truly the ideal Bed Springs. A bed spring that at $7.50 is unapproachably the best to be had tomorrow, because of this special arrangement, you may have one without cost with any brass bed you buy here—isn't it the most sensational offer you've ever heard of? Look for the "Tiger" trade mark on every spring.

This will enable the supplying of a PRIVATE BATHROOM with hot and cold salt and fresh water with every room, and for these bathrooms no extra charge will be made during the Fall and Winter Season. The house occupies two blocks of ocean front, and its heated parlor-solariums overlooking the Boardwalk and the sunny south ocean exposure are most attractive.

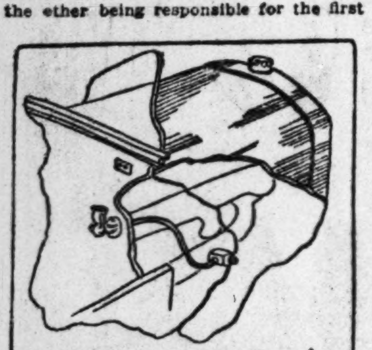
For Motorist and Motorcyclist

By High

Inquiries concerning motorists, motorcyclists, etc., will be answered. Address letters to "High Speed," care of "The Chicago Sunday Tribune."

NOTHING is more exasperating than a hard starting motor at any time, and on a cold day, when it is doubly stubborn, a motorist's patience is soon exhausted. Nor will a motor respond at all times even when a car is equipped with some sort of cranker, due entirely to the low grade of gasoline obtainable, which will not turn into gas as readily as it will when warm.

Ether is supposed to be a sure remedy when priming the cylinders with gasoline fails, but even this will not always do the work, as a Chicago motorist found during the first cold snap a short time ago. The motor would respond to the extent of one feeble impulse and then quit because the life of ether in this duty is extremely short. Had a priming can filled with part ether and part gasoline been at hand the results would have been almost certain, the ether being responsible for the first flash and the gasoline continuing the work until the vapor from the carbureter could be drawn into the cylinder.



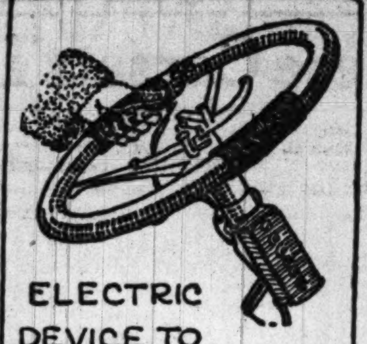
PRIMING GASOLINE WARMED BY ELECTRIC DEVICE ON INTAKE MANIFOLD

Still better, according to one authority, is alcohol for starting a motor when it is cold. An engineer who made experiments in the matter of starting motors on cold days, says: "I find that denatured alcohol is preferable to gasoline for priming purposes, because a few drops of the former injected through the priming cocks will assure a quicker start. I also find that the engine will run longer on the alcohol and give the carbureter more time to begin its work. I have tried ether for this purpose because it evaporates quickly, but while it causes a few sharp explosions it is usually necessary to give the engine a second priming."

The matter of priming is quite as important in connection with a self-starter as without, because without priming the starter is forced to rotate the motor shaft for such a long period as to appreciably run down the battery, when the starting crank may have to be used. The use of a primer of some sort will save the starting battery and will permit the motor to be started much sooner than if priming is not resorted to.

To further aid in starting in cold weather a device has been brought out for warming even the priming gasoline. An electric heater is attached to the intake manifold, the current from the lighting battery being used to supply the heat. The gasoline is run into a priming cup located conveniently on the dash, and when the gasoline is poured into this it is heated before it enters the intake pipe, being then in a state whereby it will readily turn into vapor.

Another cold weather comfort for motorists is an electric apparatus for warming the steering wheel, or rather for keeping it warm. This consists of a small leather boot, which is attached to the rim of the wheel by means of lacing and which contains a small resistance coil. A switch which may be located at any convenient spot for the driver is closed, and the current from the storage battery is sent to the resistance coil, thus setting up a heat and keeping the small leather boots—one on either side of the wheel, where the motorist's hands are apt to find a position. If the weather is warm and no heat is needed the current is not turnd on, and consequently no heat is generated. In the summer the boots may be removed merely by unlacing.



ELECTRIC DEVICE TO WARM STEERING WHEEL

The little boots referred to are operative on the same principle as an electric heater of any sort, electric curling iron, electric flatiron, or other electric device producing heat. Such devices and others that may be found for use on a car naturally are designed for use with the small batteries, such as six volt capacity, and they are made to draw as little current as possible considering the work they are called upon to perform. Unless a car is fitted with a generator to supply battery current, such apparatus will hardly be successful, for naturally considerable current will be used, and unless there is a constant supply the battery will soon be run down and will require charging so frequently as to disgust the owner.

Cars which have floor boards covered with linoleum may be made a little more comfortable if rubber matting or a heavy rug of some sort is placed on the floor to aid in keeping out the cold. Much, of course, depends on the style of the car. One that is inclosed and which has a large pan extending from the front to past the gear set, and through which the hot air from the motor must pass, should not be so arranged that the heat will be excluded, for the floor boards will become warm and the heat will be transmitted to the feet. But where cold air is permitted to sweep under the floor and to cause the boards to become cold, the rubber matting will act as a nonconductor of cold; on the other hand, it must be remembered that rubber is a nonconductor of heat and that this material will keep out heat as well.

The Tribune is asked if it is possible to fit a motor of the T head type with double plugs so as to permit a spark at the same time at each plug and the source of current from the same magneto. It is possible, and plugs for the purpose are on the market, but if the magneto already on the car was fitted to supply the current for one set of plugs, do not attempt to make it do double duty, for it will be broken down and at a critical moment will fail entirely. There are double ignition magnetos, but the ordinary kind will not stand such a severe strain as will be put on it by giving it double work in the form of supplying current to a double set of plugs.

Queries and Answers.

"Will you please publish the best route, with mileage, between Jackson, Mich., and Chicago? I am a subscriber to The Tribune and have been for a long time and would consider it a favor for the publication, as I desire to make the trip by automobile within the next ten days.

"W. H. M., Jackson, Mich."

	Miles.		Miles.
Jackson	0	Michigan road	144
Albion	19	Michigan City	162
Marshall	30	Chesterton	177
Battle Creek	43	East Gary	188
Kalamazoo	66	Miller	191
Paw Paw	85	Gary	196
Dowagiac	110	East Chicago	206
Pokagon	116	South Chicago	214
Niles	124	Chicago	227
Hudson Lake	142

In connection with the route from the east, a letter received by The Tribune from one of its motorist readers is of importance as bearing on the condition of the roads at this time of the year and also in relation to the Canadian roads:

Having just returned from a trip in Canada, I can give some road information, also about general road conditions in Ontario. I did not pass through Stratford, but was within a few miles of the town. Tell your readers to go through St. Marys, Thorndale, and Coumblin to London. At London go to the Tecumseh garage, back of the Tecumseh hotel, and get free a small cardboard map of the road to Detroit, which is all good except the last ten miles into Windsor.

Leaving Detroit one comes out in Michigan avenue through Wayne, Ypsilanti, Battle Creek, Jackson, Kalamazoo, and Dowagiac to Niles. Don't go to South Bend, as the road between South Bend and Laporte is bad and is being repaired. The Chicago-Detroit road does not go through South Bend, but meets the Lincoln highway between South Bend and Laporte. Follow the highway from Laporte to Schererville, Ind., then turn to the right before crossing the railroad and follow good new macadam into Hammond.

East of Kalamazoo is a detour on account of road repairing. When you find a sign "road closed" at four corners turn left and go to the first right hand turn. (When you get there you will think it can't be right, but go ahead.) Keep turning to the right wherever you have a chance and you finally get back to the main road.

Have Canadian motorists get an American license, as they will have to remove the Ontario license on arrival in Detroit. If coming to Chicago they should get an Illinois license, which will take them through other states, and they are supposed to be allowed only ten days here on a foreign license. They can, of course, get that by mail before leaving home. Let them write to John Robinson & Sons, Niagara Falls, Ont., about their bonds.

W. F. POOLE, Chicago.

"I would be much obliged to you if you can advise me through your automobile department in The Sunday Tribune the best roads to Clifton, Iroquois county, Ill.

J. J. Vatava, Chicago."

South in Cottage Grove avenue to Ninety-fifth street, west to State, south to One Hundred and First street, east to Michigan avenue, south to the end; then turn east and follow the one road into Riverdale. Go straight through, running into Dolton, and at the fork bear right into and through Thornton. This road will take you to Chicago Heights. Go straight through, passing Steger, Crete, Beecher, Sollitt, and Grant to Momence. Here you turn southwesterly into Kankakee and from this point you follow closely the line of the Illinois Central road direct to Clifton, which is eighty-five miles by this route. You will find considerable dirt roads after leaving Chicago Heights. You can go by way of Hammond, Crown Point, Thayer, and Morocco, and then cut across to Clifton. This will be longer but there will be hard roads all the way to Morocco.

"In directing motorists from Chicago to Kalamazoo and the east, guide books and others invariably send them through South Bend. If they were sent through Hudson Lake direct to Niles they would avoid a lot of bad road and save several miles of travel.

"W. G. Blish, Niles, Mich."

"I am contemplating an automobile trip to Springfield, Ill., and wish The Tribune would give me the best route, together with distances and road conditions.

N. C. F., Chicago."

The ordinary way would be to go through Joliet to Morris, thence to Dwight, Bloomington, and Lincoln to Springfield. This is not, however, the best way, although the shortest. The Tribune would suggest, if distance is not a factor, to go to the end of Washington boulevard and follow the Starved Rock trail to Ottawa, the road being well marked all the way. From Ottawa go directly south to Streator, thence to Wenona, and south through Minonk to Bloomington. Here you strike the old Chicago road, which leads through Lincoln direct to Springfield. The roads are excellent all the way to Streator, but between Streator and Bloomington some dirt will be encountered, and from Bloomington to Springfield the road is practically all loam, although most of it is dragged. Ottawa is eighty-eight miles; from Ottawa to Streator it is sixteen miles, from Streator to Bloomington fifty-seven miles, and from Bloomington to Springfield seventy-five miles, making a total distance of 237 miles.

"Please give the writer, through The Tribune, an automobile route from Rock Island to Chicago by way of Springfield, with distances.

B. Skinner,

"Rock Island, Ill."

It is inadvisable to attempt the trip at this time of the year, as much of the way is over dirt roads, which will be bad after rains; it will be a long, hard journey, whereas the direct road through Princeton, Mendota, and Aurora is good and direct. The route requested would be from Rock Island through Alpha to Galesburg, forty-seven miles; Galesburg to Peoria by way of Knoxville, Maquon, and Farmington, fifty-four miles; Peoria to Springfield through Delavan and Middletown, seventy miles, mostly dirt and sand. The distance to Springfield is thus 171 miles. From Springfield follow the St. Louis-Chicago road through Lincoln, thirty-eight miles; Bloomington, seventy-seven miles; Pontiac, 118 miles; Dwight, 137 miles; Morris, 157 miles; Joliet, 185 miles; Joliet to Chicago by way of Summit and Archer avenue, 226 miles. When Summit is reached it may be necessary because of road repairs to go south to Argo, then east on Sixty-third street to Michigan avenue, this being good all the way. The road out of Joliet for some miles is rough.

"My car and other cars with which I am familiar gives better service after sundown; the motor runs sweetly and apparently has more power. Can you tell me why this is and are there any devices on the market which will duplicate the condition? Can you refer me to any books or magazines that discuss this problem? My motor rarely misses firing at night, but is frequently guilty during the day.

G. W. L., Olney, Ill."

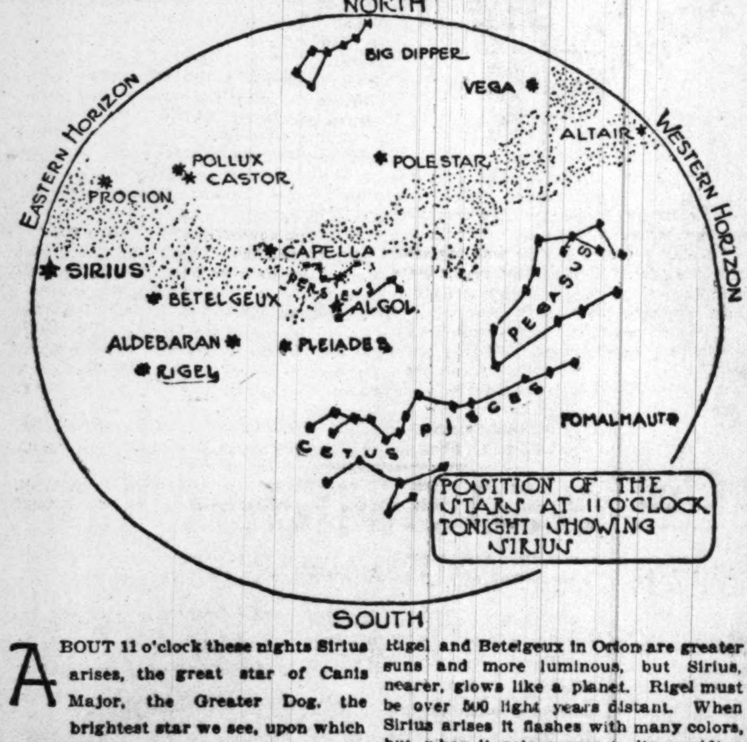
Eliminate that part which is imagination and you still have some facts to stand on. The reason is that the night air is more dense, has more moisture, and contains more oxygen, which will give a better mixture. The mixture in the day is more or less rarified. The same results will be noticed during a rain. The dampness will tend to eliminate clanking noises due to one metal part working against another because of lubricating effects, and woodwork will swell so as to do away with creaking that might occur if dry. Have you not noticed that the hotter the weather the more noise your motor made? Even with careful carbureter adjustment the same results cannot be produced in daytime. The matter of missing is probably due wholly to the adjustment of the mixture—it must be. The Tribune knows of no authority that has discussed this topic.

"One of the most interesting and helpful departments is your column for motorists and motorcyclists in your Sunday edition. The directions you hand tourists on routes in many directions are much more correct than any guide book I know of and are appreciated by far more people than you know of, perhaps. Your description and map in last Sunday's edition of the Lincoln Highway was correct and your placing of Sterling at the head of the second column of most important towns on the route is appreciated by our citizens, as it is absolutely one of the best towns on the map. Will you kindly inform us in your motorist column next Sunday how much cash and material has been subscribed to the Lincoln Highway association so far and how much of it has been expended on the highway by the association. A little knowledge of these facts will lend greater interest in the project.

W. J. Doherty, Sterling, Ill."

Changes in the condition of work on the Lincoln highway are so frequent that the information desired would better be secured from the Lincoln Highway association, Detroit, Mich., which is in a position to give all details asked.

ASTRONOMY.



POSITION OF THE STARS AT 11 O'CLOCK TONIGHT SHOWING SIRIUS

ABOUT 11 o'clock these nights Sirius arises, the great star of Canis Major, the Greater Dog, the brightest star we see, upon which has been fastened the malevolent intent of the dog days. They are supposed to start with the heliacal rising of the star and endure while it is hidden in the heavens by the sunlight.

To our eyes it is the most stupendous of the suns. It is a southern star, the one of the great southern stars which arises to the view of this latitude in which it has no equal. It is brilliantly white, with a tinge of color, blue or green. It has about a tenth of the brilliance of the planet Venus, is about thirty times as luminous as our sun, and has fifteen times its diameter.

It cannot be mistaken in the southeast and later in November its earlier arising brings it into the view of other than folk who sit up late.

Now that the yellow hunter's moon has removed the beauty or the blight of its full, amber light from the winter clothed woods, Sirius comes up to take its place in the winter sky.

The brightness of Sirius to our vision is due to the nearness of this sun to our system. It is 8.7 light years distant. Rigel and Betelgeux in Orion are greater suns and more luminous, but Sirius, nearer, glows like a planet. Rigel must be over 500 light years distant. When Sirius arises it flashes with many colors, but when it gets nearer to its meridian it steadies into a brilliant white.

It is nearly in a line with the three stars in the belt of Orion, but it will reveal its identity in the southeast without specific direction when once it has attained a sufficient height to clear the horizon obstructions.

It is estimated that several hundred centuries ago Sirius was on the eastern border of the Milky Way. In its cross motion in the heavens it has passed through the way. In a century it moves a distance about equivalent to one-fourteenth of the apparent diameter of the moon.

Sirius is located in the mouth of the constellation of the Greater Dog and is supposed to flare with the malignancy of that animal.

Sirius is one of the double stars. Its companion can be seen only with a telescope, being of the ninth and a half magnitude. Sirius is a young sun, but its companion is losing life. The two suns revolve about their center of gravity in a period of about fifty-three years.

By Christmas Sirius is arising early in the evening, at 7 o'clock, and even by Thanksgiving time it will be up in time for reasonably early observation.

Officers' Signals Confuse Motorists

THE attention of the automobile editor of The Tribune often has been directed to the weird methods of giving signals by the traffic squad. Here is the most recent complaint. We trust the complainant's letter will be read by the chief of the traffic division and all the men under him. The letter follows:

As an owner of an automobile I appreciate every effort made to safeguard pedestrians in crossing streets, as well as to safeguard automobilists from each other and street cars, not only while crossing streets but upon thoroughfares generally. What gets my goat is the fact that hardly two officers have the same signal. If a system of this kind is to be perfect, then it must be so disciplined that every officer gives the same signals and in the same way.

Take the whistle signal, for instance. They are all about the same when they blow the one toot, but when they come to the crosswise signal of two blasts on the whistle there is as much variety to it as there is to the different gutter bands. In half the cases you don't know whether the first blast is a single blast or whether it is to be followed by another. Some officers give a shrill blast first and then follow this up with a pianissimo tone which perhaps may end in a full round blast, or a tremolo staccato.

The other day while crossing State street I heard two whistles and started to go across, whereupon an officer stepped in front of me and motioned to me to stop. I told him I heard two whistles, but he said I did not. He then said, "Pay no attention to whistles; you watch me."

The matter of turning from a cross town street into a north and south street is not followed alike by the traffic officers. For instance, take the intersection of Madison and State streets. If driving west in Madison and you want to turn north in Wabash, one officer made me hold up until he gave the up and down signal before he would permit me to turn north in Wabash. I took exception to his signal and he came over and said I had no right to move north until I got the one whistle. He did not consider that I was holding up a lot of men back of me who wanted to cross, but who, on account of my stopping, had to wait over one more stopping period.

About half an hour later I drove east in Madison street, intending to turn south in Wabash, but I got called down by the officer then on the beat for not turning south at once, without waiting for the signal, as by my stopping I had held everybody up back of me and caused a congestion. Here was just the opposite instruction.

Some officers will allow you to turn to the right without waiting for any signal at all, while other officers insist that you must stop at the crossing and not make the turn until the traffic again moves in the direction in which you were first headed.

I would suggest that the chief in charge of the traffic squad get out a certain code and then instruct his men to follow this code, and if necessary, to provide the traffic officers with this code printed upon small slips of paper which they can hand to automobilists who are seemingly disregarding the traffic rules, but who are in reality simply the victims of a mixture of two or three systems.

Ford Triples Sales Despite the European War.

By Reed L. Parker.

DETROIT, Mich.—[Special Correspondence.]—The Ford company has sold slightly fewer than three times as many cars since the war began in Europe, that is, since Aug. 1, than it disposed of during the corresponding months of last year. Exactly 64,448 cars were made and sold by the factory here between Aug. 1 and Oct. 31. In 1913, 25,752 cars were shipped during the same months. The increase was 38,736 cars.

The sales were divided as follows: In August, 21,597 cars were sold; in September, 22,753; in October, 20,228. In August of last year 8,322 cars were delivered; in September, 9,981; in October, 7,449. Orders for a great majority of these cars were received after the war began. There has been no attempt made to force sales.

From day to day during August and September there was a steady increase in the number of cars shipped. There was a comparatively slight falling off—a matter of 2,525 cars to be exact—in the month of October. Compared with last year the pencentage of decrease was much less, however, the sales in October of 1913 being 2,532 cars less than in September of that year.

I have the word of the company that the October slump can be traced to no other source than the natural letup of business which always occurs at that time of the year. Thus far in November the sales have continued to increase and there seems every reason to believe the unprecedented health of the Ford trade will continue into 1915—war or no war.

It should be understood that all cars sold out of the factory here go to the domestic market. The Ford factory at Walkerville, Canada, and at Manchester, England, supply the foreign trade. Of the condition of their business more will be said later.

Reduced to a matter of dollars and cents, the above figures are staggering. Roughly speaking they mean that 64,448 buyers of this country have given one company close to $32,000,000 for its product within a period of ninety-two days, or an average of $350,455 each day. Under ordinary conditions this would be remarkable—under the present circumstances, with a war of record breaking magnitude going on in Europe, with domestic business conditions unsettled, to put it mildly, and with a policy of retrenchment everywhere, the vogue among our people is almost unbelievable.

I sought the reason for what might be called a business paradox from James Couzens of the Ford Motor company, right hand of Henry Ford, the founder and president.

"What do you think is the cause?" he was asked.

"We have a unique situation to aid us here," he said. "Ours is a low priced car. We call it the universal car and universal it is. Under ordinary business conditions we sell to all classes of men. We sell to men from a $500 bank account. We sell to men with a $1,000 account, with a $1,500 account, and so on. I imagine our average customer has about $2,500. I have no figures to prove this statement, but that is my guess.

"We are placed like several other low and medium priced car builders with regard to the situation in time of prosperity. We sell more than a few cars to persons of wealth and any number of them to persons of better than fair means.

"You will find that persons of wealth and of better than average means are the first to retrench in times of panic or when business is supposed to be bad. Mind you I said supposed to be bad. Those persons have been buying higher priced cars than we sell in times of prosperity. As soon as a squall comes they, having learned that speed is worth money, and that they are dependent on the automobile to a great extent for speed do not give up the motor car, for that would be a sort of business suicide, an admission of the fact they failed to recognize the value of time. They rid themselves of their high priced cars and secure another perhaps just as efficient as the costly motor but less pretentious. In other words, they give up luxury for efficiency. That is where we and others of the low priced builders come in.

"We sell to the retrenchers. What business we have lost among our customers with little means we replace among the ranks of those who have found it wise to retrench. That is why we seldom feel the disagreeable results of a panic or the policy of retrenchment brought about by such international catastrophes as now exists in Europe.

"Of course it would be foolish to say the war has not affected business generally. You know and I know that it has, but the general condition of affairs is not bad nor will it be bad. The automobile is a staple product. It has become a necessity. Motor cars are just as necessary to the conduct of business as the railroads. They will continue to be sold because they are an asset so long as the original investment is not too great and so long as the cost of maintenance does not exceed to the small proportion of the owner's income. I believe the automobile industry generally will be little affected by the war.

"Of course foreign trade is slack and will be slack. For example, we shipped twenty-four less cars to Australasia in August of this year than we shipped the same month in 1913. We shipped 198 cars last year and 174 this. In September our Australasian trade was hit hardest, as we did not ship a single car to that territory. In September, 1913, we sent 204 cars over there.

"The business gradually is coming back, however, our Mr. Campbell of the Walkerville plant telling me that we shipped seventy-two cars in October, as against 265 a year before, while we already have shipped 166 cars this month. I believe the foreign trade is readjusting itself and excepting in the belligerent countries will continue to improve as a feeling of confidence is restored.

"As soon as the war is over I think we may expect a period of depression. Billions of dollars are being burned. It will take time to replace the losses. Until that is accomplished cash will be short. I believe the depression will be more keen immediately after the war than it is during the strife.

"We American manufacturers can well pray there will be no deviation on the part of the United States from the present policy of neutrality. Peace is absolutely necessary to us if we would profit from the war in a business way."

"What do you think of our South American prospects?" Mr. Couzins was asked.

"Our prospects are good," he replied, "but our system of credits with the South American countries, as every one knows, is bad, and besides this has been a poor year for crops down there. Our South American representative reports almost everything has been a failure. There is little money being made and less being spent. There will be little marketing of our cars there for a while. Eventually I believe the South American field will be splendid. We are not allowing one bad year to influence our South American trade, however, and ours shall be the attitude of the missionary.

"Summing the situation up, I say positively that this country never was in better shape to face a crisis than now and that the salvation of our trade is in domestic hands. I am certain the Ford company will enjoy its most prosperous year. We are employing in our plant here more than 15,000 men. We need them all. To the laboring man generally, however, I express this hope: that they will recognize the truth of the statement 'a half a loaf is better than no loaf at all' and that, believing in it, they will stick to the jobs they now have even on half time. This will do more to solve the problem of the unemployed than any other agency."

Studebaker FOUR

Electric Starter—Electric Lights—Full Floating Rear Axle—Complete Timken Bearing Equipment—Extra Size Tires, Safety Tread on Rear

The Studebaker FOUR Appeals To You Instantly

The color and varnish work is so distinctly above the average that you notice it with gratification. The marks of the brush are not apparent—the color and varnish have been flowed on the surface and rubbed in through twenty operations. The color and varnish are satin-smooth, velvet-like—as perfect as the color and varnish work on a fine piano.

The fenders are of beautiful crown shape. Every line is a curve which blends harmoniously with the perfect symmetry of the body.

The running boards, covered full length with aluminum, are in studied unity with fenders and body lines.

This is the analysis of why the Studebaker FOUR appeals to you instantly, why it satisfies your sense of car beauty.

But think for a moment!

You Buy Time-Service with the Studebaker FOUR

Do you buy a Studebaker FOUR just because it is beautiful the day you take it out of the show room, or do you buy it for the service, for the pleasure, for the convenience, for the happiness of your family and for a thousand other appealing things which a motor car develops as you own and drive it?

If the first appearance, the first impression of your car, is the thing you buy it for, you are cheating yourself out of a large part of the real value of the Studebaker FOUR.

Your Studebaker FOUR is planned and manufactured for the service it will give you, for a year—two years—five years, after you buy it.

After the car has traveled ten thousand miles, its motor, if given a little care, will run as smoothly, as silently, as swiftly as it did the day you took it out of the show room. The springs will be as resilient, the whole car as tight and as noiseless, as the first day you drove up in front of your house.

Studebaker manufactures time-service into the splendid Studebaker steels.

The light, perfectly balanced reciprocating parts of the motor will give hundreds and thousands of miles of smooth, silent running efficiency.

The gears and axles likewise have the same quality of time-service manufactured into them.

Even the lustrous and beautiful body finish, if given reasonable care, will be bright and fresh for years after it has been exposed to rigorous service.

These are the things we want you to bear in mind when you buy your Studebaker FOUR.

These are the things which represent its real value to you.

These are the things which Quality means.

Remember that you are not buying a car just because it looks beautiful the day you take it out of the show room.

You are buying it for what it will look like and what it will run like after you have driven it a year, or two years, or five years. This is the time-service that is manufactured into Studebaker cars.

Studebaker cannot afford to build any other kind of a car.

This is what we mean when we tell you to BUY IT BECAUSE IT'S A STUDEBAKER.

MRS. HOBART CHATFIELD-TAYLOR

FRANCIS X. BUSHMAN

KITTY KELLY.

A board of three judges, consisting of Francis X. Bushman of the Essanay company, Mrs. Hobart C. Chatfield-Taylor, and Miss Kitty Kelly of THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE will decide as to the merits of contributions.

All scenarios must be in by midnight of Saturday, Jan. 16, 1915. The names of the prize winners will be announced on Sunday, Jan. 31, 1915. The prize winning scenarios will be produced and featured by the Essanay company, which also reserves the right to buy at its usual rates such of the contributions submitted as it deems available for production.

We recommend that you keep a duplicate copy of your contribution. Every effort will, of course, be made to return such photoplays as are not acceptable, but in a contest of this kind mishaps may happen, and it is best that all precautions be taken.

We are not giving you any elaborate form to follow, because it is not technical perfection we are aiming for in this contest. It is ORIGINALITY.

You have IDEAS around which you think wonderful stories could be woven—stories that would make photo-plays that would set the world talking. But you have despaired, because the talk of "form," "technique," etc., has frightened you.

"I have a story for a play," you've told yourself, "but I could never, never write it as they say scenarios must be written if accepted."

Now is the chance for you to give the world those ideas of yours.

George Tyler, the theatrical manager, once said in speaking to a playwright:

"Learning the technique of playwriting is something like learning to talk Italian. Anybody can learn to talk Italian. Anybody! By study, application, observance of rules. But give me the man who can SAY something in Italian!"

It was this same manager who also remarked once: "Give me thirty seconds of ACTION—tense, pulsing, absorbing ACTION, and I'll take care of the rest."

It stands to reason that any one fairly well supplied with gray matter can learn scenario form. But it takes MIND to produce IDEAS.

So, as you sit down to compete for the prizes, forget that there is such a thing as scenario form. Put your idea into condensed story form, something as follows:

>
> "My God, I have killed him!"

And so on, until you have brought your story to its conclusion.

Now that is easy, isn't it?

You have IDEAS? Won't you submit them?

The contest is yours.

Voice of the Movie Fan.

Dear Miss Tinee: Your correspondent, R. S. Travers, voiced the opinion of many sincere admirers of the moving pictures in his disgust of the Keystone comedies. No one who has seen as many beautiful, elevating photo plays as the writer has been privileged to view can possibly derive any pleasure from the silly Keystone comedies.

They are pleasing to the children, I have observed, and to men and women of certain mental limitations, but to the intelligent person they are disgusting.

The fine dramas which appeal to the best in human nature seem to be beyond the comprehension of some of your correspondents, who allude to them as "silly sob stuff." They are far truer to life than the aforementioned comedies, for life is made up of sunshine and shadow—especially the latter.

It is not that we lack a sense of humor, but because we prefer comedies that contain a more refined wit that do not consist of contortions of the face and body and silly antics. MRS. H. S. W.

Dear Miss Tinee: I, like Mr. R. S. Travers, also am a dyed in the wool movie fan, and thoroughly agree with him in regard to so-called comedies of the Keystone caliber. "Mr. Full and Mr. Fuller" disgusted me very much, although I am not a prude, and how any intelligent American audience can enjoy such pictures is past my understanding. Give us comedies and plenty of them, but let them be of the good and wholesome kind which leave a sweet taste in one's mouth. Let them be restricted to the Ruth Stonehouse and Sidney Drew variety.

HENRY ASHLAND.

Dear Miss Tinee: I think "The Love Affairs of Peggy" are dandy, and as a "real Darling Peggy" I am suggesting the darling, Mary Pickford. I am sure she would make a delightful Peggy. I would be so much pleased to see Jack W. Corrigan of the Feature Film company play opposite her. The two together would be divine. I simply adore them both. If I were a man she would be my ideal girl, but I am a girl, so Mr. Corrigan is my exact ideal man. I would so much love to see the two stars together.

Edith Storey

MISS EDITH STOREY of the Vitagraph company! She's a popular little leading woman with young and old, and has been ever since she made her first appearance at the age of 10 with Miss Eleanor Robson in "Audrey." In this engagement her dramatic ability was so marked that she was immediately engaged to play a child's part in "The Little Princess" and later to feature in "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch." She will be remembered by many as the 16 year old girl in "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm." It was at the termination of her engagement with this production that Miss Storey became interested in the "movies."

"It is about five years now," she says, "since I joined the Vitagraph company, and I like my work better every day."

Because of her versatility she is given assignments to all parts of the world. She has lately been in California, where she played a number of strong "leads" with the Western Vitagraph company, including Bonita, a South American senorita, in "Captain Alvarez." Among others of her important portrayals might be mentioned "The Christian," in which she appeared as Glory Quayle, the part made famous by Viola Allen; "Chains of an Oath," "The French Spy," "The Vengeance of Durand," "Peggy's Burglar," a comedy; a character part in "Martha Washington," "Marie Louise," and others. Comedy parts do not appeal to Miss Storey and it is only occasionally she is seen in a picture of this kind. Strong, emotional roles attract her by inclination and temperament, and it is in characters of intense human interest she is seen at her best. She is 22 years old and is not married.

R. C.: Myrtle Stedman and Jack Conway took the two leading parts in "The Valley of the Moon"—a Bosworth production. I should judge John Bunny to be more than five and less than six feet tall. You're welcome.

BETTY VARTEX: That was a beautiful letter you wrote. It was lovely of you to take the time to tell me what you did. Yes, Rita Stanwood took the part of the little factory girl in "The Lost Paradise" with H. B. Warner. She's fine, isn't she? Your vote for the "Frame" has been recorded.

K. R. S.: Thanks awfully for your good advice. I'll hurry up and follow it. I couldn't begin to tell you who my favorites are. I have so many. Yes, I've seen "The Christian" and thought it wonderful. I'm so glad we agree, aren't you?

HELEN J.: I do not know the name of Carlyle Blackwell's wife, but believe her to be a nonprofessional. I had never heard that Gertrude McCoy was married? Do you think she is?

VIRGINIA F.: In order to receive accurate information, you must always mention the name of the company producing the picture in which you are interested. Write again, repeating your question and giving the company's name and I'll be glad to tell you what you want to know. Thanks ever so much for the nice things you say.

KITTY L.: The material you request has been mailed to you. I do hope it may help my "unknown friend."

EVERETTE E. J.: Kathlyn Williams was married to a Mr. Allen. She recently obtained a divorce. Wasn't it lovely of her to correct your scenarios for you! The Keystone studio is located at 1712 Allesandro street, Los Angeles, Cal.

M.: If you look like Alice Joyce you must be lovely! A stamped and self-addressed envelope will bring you some printed material on "How to Become a Photo Player," which would undoubtedly interest you. If you're determined to be one, what good would my advice do you? I might advise you not to. Think of it!

MOVIE FAN: Yes, James Cruze and the "countess," who is Marguerite Snow, are married. I agree with you that Miss La Badie is a "dear." I'll be glad to send you the printed material you request on photoplay writing if you'll send me a stamped and self-addressed envelope. Your vote recorded. Thanks.

INQUISITIVE: Lloyd Lonergan lives in New Rochelle, N. Y. He is a scenario writer. I imagine he is about the age you mention and know that, at one time, he lived in Chicago.

F. T. W.: Yes, Lionel Barrymore is still with the Biograph company. I have no information regarding the other actor you mention. Awfully sorry.

ESTHER W.: Thomas Santschi was recently sued for divorce. Warren Kerrigan has a number of brothers. He is not married.

MISS SWEET SEVENTEEN: So you think Mary Pickford would make "an ideal Peggy"? Well, maybe she would. Thanks for wanting to know all about me and also for promising faithfully not to try to ferret out the mystery that surrounds me if I'll give you my word I'm not a man. I'm not! I'm not! I'm not! Cross my heart! Thank you for writing. Your letter was a real pleasure.

LORETTA B.: If you will send a stamped and self-addressed envelope I will write you a personal letter on the subject you mention. It is impossible for me to advise you privately through the paper.

M. C.: Your letter is cleverly written and there is a great deal in what you say regarding the discrepancies to be discovered in "movie" plays. I agree with you that much more attention should be paid to detail. On the other hand, when you consider how many plays are turned out, and with how many people a director has to deal, it is surprising that there are not more serious "breaks" than we see. Regarding the first instance mentioned by you, I think you will find that it has no important bearing on the story. Thank you for writing. I loved getting your letter.

MARIE P.: A letter addressed to Pearl White, care of the Pathe Freres company, 1 Congress street, Jersey City Heights, New Jersey, will reach her. No trouble at all.

HIGH SCHOOL: Grace Cunard and Francis Ford say they are not married. At the present time they are engaged in working on "The Madcap Queen." You're entirely welcome.

The Love Affairs of Peggy

[Copyright: 1914: By The Tribune Company.]

Elliott in this episode proves himself not a patient man. Being a lawyer, he advances reasons as to why a man should have his own way when he wants it. Peggy, sweetly amiable, offers no objections.
Peggy—who art thou?

O, JOURNAL, I am so happy and gay—happy and gay—happy and gay! Everything's lovely, for Elliott and I have made up and the blonde I saw him out riding with that rainy afternoon was only a friend of his sister's whom he loathes. He says she talks like this:

"O, djah Mr. Holt, it is rae-ally too lovely of yew to put youahself to all this bothah——" like that, and she's no southerner, just affected—after she's fairly insisted on his sister's calling him up and making him come for her in his car, because she hates to get in messy street cars in the rain. And he didn't get her the violets she was wearing. She had 'em on when he first saw her. I shall never distrust that adorable man again. It's a shame the way I acted. Journal, only to you will I admit that sometimes Peggy is a C-A-T! Don't you ever tell I told you!

After we had made up our quarrel and everything was going beautifully—Peggy wearing her ring again, etc.—Elliott said vurry gravely: "Peggy, I'm awfully tired of being engaged. Let's get married!"

I said: "Why, you know my father told you I was too young!"

He said: "I know he did. But I think he should give his idea a retrial. At any rate, I'm going to appeal the case. That is, of course, if you are willing."

"O," I said, magnanimously, "of course I'll agree to anything you and dad decide is best. But of course even if we do get married sooner than we intended, I've still got to have quite a lot of time. My clothes and things——"

"O, hang clothes!" Elliott said.

I told him severely: "Don't you dare to talk like that! I only expect to have one wedding in my whole life and that's going to be the real thing. And then the girls would simply expire if we didn't give them time to give the luncheons and showers they're planning. No, sir, Elliott, you're not going to railroad my wedding through!"

"She's Not a Southerner"

"It's my wedding, too," he reminded me, sort of sulkily.

"Well," I told him, "it was my wedding first, for if I hadn't said yessir there wouldn't be going to be any wedding. Just remember that."

At which we both laughed and the atmosphere cleared again. (If Elliott and I ever do have any peace I suppose we'll have to get married. At the present it's growly weather all the time.)

Well, he being an attorney, of course dad didn't stand much chance when he started to argue. He and mother put forth a few weak little objections, but Elliott overruled them all. If I was old enough to be engaged, he argued, I was old enough to be married, and, O, he was so lonesome, and—things like that, you know—that made dad sympathize with him and mother agree that a hearthside without a woman is no hearthside at all. So, at last it was decided at a general family council that, four months from date, the wedding should take place. And now, journal, you should just witness the tender consideration with which I am treated by my family. It is quite, quite touching!

"If I Hadn't Said 'Yes Sir' There Wouldn't Be Going to Be Any Wedding!"

A few days later: Such a stew! Everybody is lovely to me, but all the girls I ever knew expect to be bridesmaids. They don't say anything—of course—but the hints! The brunettes say, wouldn't it be lovely to have the wedding party all dark! And the blondes remark on how striking and attractive contrasts always are. O, la, and again la! A bride-to-be is in her element in more ways than one!

I've got to decide tonight on who the bridesmaids shall be. I've only two really intimate friends, you know, Bess and Matilda. They know, of course, that one of them will be maid of honor. Which shall it be—Bess or Matilda? O, journal, for goodness sake, help me out! Think of all the things I've told you that nobody else ever dreamed of and tell me which, which shall it be—Bess or Matilda? I tell you what I'll do. I'll write their names on scraps of paper, toss 'em up in a hat, and then choose one. [Wait a minute].

It's Bess! Well, that's all right. Matilda can be one of the bridesmaids.

Several days later: It's all decided. Mother helped me. We've chosen the girls to be bridesmaids and Elliott's married sister is to be matron of honor. And now it's clothes and dressmakers and parties until I feel like a chipmunk in a cage! Life is just one constant round of something doing. Elliott is as grouchy as an old married man. Says he never gets a chance to see me alone and demands to know the use of all the nonsense, any way. Mother can't hear him when he talks that way to her, but dad perfectly agrees with him and tells him of similar experiences when he was trying to wrest mother from the bosom of her family.

"Do you honestly enjoy all this, Peg?" Elliott demands. When he puts it that way I do have to hesitate a little. Of course it's terribly exciting and all that; but I must admit all this rush is giving me a queer nervous feeling in the pit of my stomach and I've had hysterics three times this week. I'll never admit it to any one but you, journal, but I do wish it was over."

Heavings, there's the door bell and it's Thursday—the maid's out. Some more later!

HIGH GRADE MEN.

Are you dissatisfied with your present position? Do you dislike going to your work in the morning, and when quitting time approaches is it your one aim to break away from your work just as quickly as you possibly can?

If the above is true you owe it to yourself to resign from your position, for you will never feel satisfied or make a success at it in this frame of mind.

The position you want, and the one which spells success for you, is the kind that upon getting up in the morning you are glad to go to, and in the evening you are loath to leave.

We lay particular emphasis upon this—that we always endeavor to secure for our clientele the kind of positions for which they think they are best fitted. We are on the right track in doing this, as it is to your success—and ours—to establish you in such a position where you can cheerfully and willingly give the best service of which you are capable.

The following are some of the positions we have to offer:

Steno., $10; clerk, $18, pawnbroker exp.; stockkeeper, optical goods, $10; ledgerman, $12; cashier, nights, $8; stock man, paper exp., $10; multigraph, $8; dictaphone, $15; bellboy, $15 month, room and board.

We especially need salesmen in coal, $15; printing, $10 and comm.; steam valves, $35; talking machines, clothing, liquor, insurance, drugs, printing, automobiles, and butter and eggs, hosiery, barber supplies. 10 solicitors, salary and comm.

The following is also of interest to boys: Bank messengers, errand and office boys, from $5 to $8.

Come in and talk it over with us. It costs you nothing, and perhaps at this very moment we can offer you something eminently worth your while.

Employment Agencies.

HIGH GRADE WOMEN—

Are you dissatisfied with your present position? Do you dislike going to your work in the morning, and when quitting time approaches is it your one aim to break away from your work just as quickly as you possibly can?

If the above is true you owe it to yourself to resign from your position, for you will never feel satisfied or make a success at it in this frame of mind.

The position you want, and the one which spells success for you, is the one that upon getting up in the morning you are glad to go to, and in the evening you are loath to leave.

We lay particular emphasis upon this—that we always endeavor to secure for our clientele the kind of positions for which they think they are best fitted. We are on the right track in doing this, as it is to your success—and ours—to establish you in such a position where you can cheerfully and willingly give the best service of which you are capable.

The following are some of the positions which we have to offer:

Legal Steno., $15; Steno. and Gen. Office, $8; Steno., out of town, $15; others from $8 to $10; Dictaphone Oprs., $12, out of city; 2 Dictaphone Oprs., mail order, $9 to $12; Bkkpr., jewelry exp., $15, and clothing exp., $15; Bkkpr., West Side, $12; Cashier, $8; Typist, out of town, $8; others from $7 to $9; General Office Girls, $5 to $7; Salesladies, for cloaks and suits, $15; Music Rolls, $10; Books, Candies; Solicitors, for city and road, salary and commission. Are You a Success?

[Private car excursions, Tuesdays, Nov. 10th and 24th.]

THE TROUBLE with men who don't succeed is mostly that they do not get into step with some big movement. They don't realize they are living in a progressive period and yet are out of it. The biggest movement right now in this country is the occupation and development of the remaining unimproved lands.

THE DIFFERENCE between men who are successes or failures is principally mental habit. Men who think catch the spirit of the times and take advantage of continuance of progress in manufacturing, commerce, and agriculture. When human endeavor hesitates temporarily in one direction it seeks another outlet. Just now the great tide of investment has turned to farm lands. Agriculture is uppermost in public interest and we are bracing ourselves as a nation to plow more furrows to help feed millions of people of other nations who have suddenly become dependent upon us.

YOU, WHO HAVE BEEN hesitating, can't you see that now is the time to acquire farm land? Don't put it off until next year, but come on one of my final excursions this month. It will be just a little harder to buy next year, as it is each succeeding year. Can't you apply the big tendency of the times to the direction of your own efforts and investment? The present impetus given to land values will be permanent. When peace comes to devastated Europe immigration to America will surpass all records.

AND WHY MICHIGAN? Because Michigan is one of the few undeveloped spots left in our country. It is located here at the consuming center of population, near the world market of Chicago also Milwaukee, Grand Rapids, and Detroit; tapped by the main arteries of rail and water transportation and has the climate, soil, rainfall water supply, and other conditions that produce every crop known to the temperate zone, including ambitious, energetic healthy men and women and happy, well fed children. What more in life?

OVER TWO THOUSAND strong, we of the Swigart Tract are a part of the nationwide land movement. We are doing our part in Michigan, backing our district in Mason, Manistee, Lake, and Wexford Counties with our united force of money, muscle, and brains. We do believe we are in the best part of Michigan with our central Fruit Belt location, handy to both rail and great lakes traffic. We do know we are in the most rapidly developing part of the state and the part that far more than any other, is calling to itself substantial farmers from Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, and Ohio. Ours is a general farming country with the addition of the most favorable conditions for fruit.

AND THE SWIGART ORGANIZATION is doing its full share—living up to its promise and more. The promise—to stay with the settlers and aid them in every way possible. We maintain a corps of Michigan agricultural college men, experienced in all branches of agriculture to guide and direct the farmers. These men have their districts and regularly visit every farmer's place. Our prices are low, ranging from $10 to $35 per acre, and a large selection at $18 to $20, and the contract is liberal, giving seven years' time by monthly or yearly payments. Also insurance to the purchaser after part is paid for, and privilege of exchange if a customer before moving on the land prefers any other to his first selection. The aim of this big land organization [probably the largest in the U. S.] is to place a settler on every 40, 80, 120, and 160 acre piece, and its policy is to satisfy as well as to sell him land. This aim and policy has placed the stamp of success and permanency on the work of this colonizing project.

THOROUGH-GOING FARMERS, you who want all the reasons why you will do well to join this big, hustling strong colony in the Swigart Tract, send at once for literature, a big, indexed, illustrated 72-page catalogue of all the crops, resources, and advantages of this district, also a large map; ask also for a copy of the Wellston Bulletin, telling about the farmers' meeting, new bridge being completed, recent improvements, and the progress of the district. Call if convenient and see samples of our 1914 crops, of clover, rye, vetch, wheat, oats, corn, potatoes, and vegetables and fruits.

THE NEXT PRIVATE CAR EXCURSIONS to the Swigart Tract will be Tuesdays, November 10th and 24th, by the P. M. R R., leaving our Chicago office at 11:30 a. m. Fare, $8.80 round trip from Chicago to Wellston our Michigan headquarters, rebated on purchase. You get back to Chicago 7:20 a. m. Thursday or Friday of the same week. Automobiles and guides free. Offices remain open Monday evenings and Saturday afternoons.

A REBUILT CADILLAC

It's a Safe Used Car to Buy.

SPECIAL VALUES NOW

A rebuilt Cadillac is superior to any new car at the same price. They are the truest values on the street. By rebuilt we mean that the cars have been entirely taken apart, each part examined, and if necessary replaced by a new part made at the Cadillac factory; the entire car repainted and refinished like new; all equipment put in first class condition—the whole car, in fact, carefully reconstructed until it is as good as new in every detail.

We offer Cadillacs exclusively as we do not accept other makes in trade. Consequently we are as interested in the performances of these rebuilt cars as we are in new Cadillacs. In actual service values, these cars are worth a great deal more than we ask for them, and we usually have a variety of body styles to select from. See them before you buy.

FINANCIAL.

WEBSTER DEFINES "OPPORTUNITY" as "fit or convenient time." It may be a "FIT" time and NOT a "CONVENIENT" time. "HARD TIMES" afford an "OPPORTUNITY" for INVESTMENT. It is a "FIT" time, because profits are large. It is NOT a "CONVENIENT" time, because money is scarce. But when the lake is frozen that is the time the iceman gets busy; it's his "OPPORTUNITY"; it's a "FIT" time, but NOT a "CONVENIENT" time. Can you analyze a proposition where the profits will reach MORE than 100% or will your wits go on a strike? The SECURITY is as SOUND as obtains in a 7% investment. Join me in an investigation. Address S N 90, Tribune.

MUTUAL RISK HEARINGS SET

State Insurance Chief to Hear Pleader for Stock Companies.

AFFECTS BIG HOUSES.

The state insurance commissioner has set Nov. 16 for the hearing of a suit filed by B. V. Hubbard to oust inter-insurance companies from Illinois. Hubbard has been connected with the stock company liability insurance companies who have been fighting by varied methods the cooperative inter-insurance companies which have been installed by most of the factories of Illinois and other states to meet the liabilities under workmen's compensation laws.

The suit attacks the constitutionality of the legislative act, which licensed the inter-insurance companies. If the contentions of Hubbard and his backers were upheld it would remove the license from all inter-insurance organizations in the state.

Many Stores Affected.

Not only would the factories of the state be affected, but all department stores, wholesale houses, and the like, which have companies in their own organizations, would be taken from under the licensing law.

The suit is the outgrowth of the campaign which stock companies with head offices in the east and represented by commission agents in Chicago and the west have been waging on the agentless cooperative companies.

In Effect Many Years.

"The principle which we operate under has been in effect many years," Frank H. Ellis, general manager of the Illinois indemnity exchange, said last night. "Fire insurance companies have used the coöperative principle for a long time, and we have adopted the same principle to liability insurance which results in the elimination of the insurance agent.

"In Illinois there are factories with pay rolls amounting to almost $100,000,000 which have inter-insurance. The inter-insurance plan is merely a mutual arrangement between factory owners for their protection under the workmen's compensation act.

PUBLIC UTILITIES BODY HAS BROAD FUNCTIONS.

State Commission Surprises by Refusing Permit for Constructing Warehouse on Drive.

Most people are surprised at the broad functions of the Illinois public utilities commission, as shown a few days ago, says Construction News. Werner Bros.' Storage Warehouse company was denied the privilege of erecting a six story warehouse at Sheridan road and Pratt boulevard Rogers Park, by the commission. Ald. Capitain of the Twenty-fifth ward and a representation of the Rogers Park Improvement club appeared before the commission and argued against the erection of the structure on the ground that it would depreciate the value of the property there.

Attorney Frank P. McGinn, president of the Rogers Park Improvement club, declared that the warehouse at the intersection of the two streets would not be a necessity nor a convenience to the residents of that section. Many others substantiated the testimony and the authority to build was denied.

It will be interesting to know just how far the activities of the commission will reach. Eric A. Werner, president of the warehouse storage company, had filed with the commission an application for a certificate of convenience and necessity to construct the warehouse.

UNFIT FATHERS MENACE NATION, EDUCATOR SAYS.

Chicagoan Tells Purity Congress Parentage Causes Weaklings.

Kansas City, Mo., Nov. 7.—"Undesirable fathers are a greater menace to this country than undesirable citizens," Dr. James Russell Price of Chicago asserted in an address before the international purity congress here today.

"The tendency of the age," he continued, "is to magnify motherhood and to minimize fatherhood. Yet it is a scientific fact throughout the animal world that offspring take their characteristics from the male parent.

"When we have a fatherhood, physically, mentally, and morally qualified to produce an improved race, then the tendencies to weaknesses and immoral idiocyncrasies will pass into oblivion and the apex of fatherhood will be reached."

Speakers Discuss Sex Question.

Education is the crying need of the hour in respect to the whole sex question, according to Prof. Thomas W. Galloway of James Millikin university, Decatur, Ill., another speaker. He said education was the only preventive for unchastity, for which law, reform movements against prostitution, campaigns against social diseases, and efforts to obtain living wages are merely palliatives.

"And let me say that biological facts are only the starting point in this education," he said. "It consists much more in building up standards, ideals, purposes, appreciation of sex as a means of enriching life to the end that these may provide international control of the lusts of the flesh. Much of this will never be called sex instruction, but it is none the less so."

Urges Training of Parents.

Steps toward the desired goal, Prof. Galloway asserted, were redemption of the idea of sex, the teaching of constructive aspects of sex rather than the perversions and pathology of it, the creation of a public sentiment which will allow some experimentation and the training of teachers and parents.

E. K. Mohr of New Buffalo, Mich., who also spoke before the congress, also asserted that sex education is necessary. He urged purity teaching which, though it has a bearing on the sex problem, may be given without consciousness on the part of the pupil that is receiving sex instruction.

"Seventy-five per cent of our children have a vitiated knowledge of sex before they are 10 years of age," he said. "The knowledge is the teaching of the street—incorrect and degrading."

Says Women Can Do Most.

The Rev. Frank Henry Gaines, president of Agnes Scott college, Decatur, Ga., placed the greatest responsibility for the regeneration of the human race upon the shoulders of the women.

"Unquestionably in the cause and effect of the social evil woman is the great sufferer and she can do much to prevent it," he said. "She can do much as a mother in instructing her daughter in social hygiene. She alone is the proper one to give this instruction. She can do much by controlling the dress of her daughter.

"It is a wonder to me that mothers do not rise in rebellion against fashions that decree immodesty in dress. Mothers can do much to enforce the equal moral standard. The theater, the dance, all should come under the control of woman. Until women learn to take this responsibility we will not succeed in preventing social evils."

GRAND JURY RELEASES FOUR.

Youths Held in $5,000 Bonds on Robbery Charge Are Released.

Four young men, held in $5,000 bonds each by Municipal Judge Gemmill on a charge of robbery, were released yesterday by the grand jury. The evidence against the youths is said to have been a dollar watch found in their possession. The watch belonged to a man with whom they had been quarreling. All had been drinking. Miss Anna Malloy of 5407 Woodlawn avenue was active in obtaining their release. She charged Judge Gemmill acted unfairly because he had witnessed a holdup during the previous night.

SAYS 'TRIBUNE' DEFEATED PORK

Congressman Frear Says Newspaper's Aid Won for the People.

PLANS FUTURE FIGHTS.

Representatives James A. Frear of the Tenth Wisconsin district, and the man who led the fight ending in the defeat of the $93,000,000 "pork barrel" bill in the house last spring, spent yesterday in Chicago. He took an opportunity to deliver a swift uppercut at "pork" measures in rivers and harbors bills, and pledged his support to THE TRIBUNE's campaign for scientific preparation of congressional appropriations.

"From present indications a fight is sure to occur at the next session when the rivers and harbors congress tries to put through its annual $50,000,000 'pork barrel' program," said Congressman Frear. "Until the rivers and harbors bills are removed from local political influences the 'pork barrel' will remain an annual menace that must be fought at every session. You may count on my being in the van of the fighting.

Praises "The Tribune."

"THE TRIBUNE's splendid work in preparing for the next pork barrel fight was called to my attention in remote corners of my district while campaigning in northern Wisconsin, and it may be of interest to know that at two different meetings during the campaign copies of THE TRIBUNE were handed me containing pledges from candidates for congress who have agreed to fight the next river and harbor pork barrel.

"The last pork barrel bill of $88,000,000 could not have been defeated without THE TRIBUNE's aid, which finally succeeded in arousing public sentiment throughout the west and helped to counteract the terrific back fire waged on congress at the instigation of the rivers and harbors lobby.

Press Helps Out.

"Jud Welliver, Gilson Gardner, the Washington Times, Christian Science Monitor, and notably Collier's, also went after the last bill when its viciousness was exposed, with the result that publicity killed it. Of course, the actual fighting on the senate floor was waged by Senators Burton, Kenyon, Norris, Gallinger, Borah, and others, but I am sure they will all agree that unless the press began puncturing the bill it was hard to block it, because of the powerful lobby that has some of its most active agents and representatives on the floor of both the senate and house.

"According to present plans, the fight will be renewed by the lobby at the short term in December, when a new pork barrel bill is to be introduced. It will be pushed along by the rivers and harbors congress, a most excellent body of men, who meet once a year, adopt prepared resolutions, and then adjourn, leaving in the hands of its officers the sole power and decision to determine means and methods whereby to lobby through congress the annual $50,000,000 pork barrel.

"The membership gives character to the organization, but the methods pursued by its officers and the actual objects in view are not understood by many members."

Naval Officers as Ship of State Commanders

By Josephus Daniels

Secretary of the Navy

THE Great European war, with its complications and diplomatic tangles, again brings to close scrutiny one of the principal problems connected with the navy of this or any other country—the necessity for obtaining naval officers who are not only competent to handle men and ships, but who are capable of steering the ship of state through the shoals of an international crisis.

The Navy has need of diplomats just as much as the Department of State, because there the men are trained in diplomacy from the time they enter, while in the navy the training is secondary and the necessity for using it oftentimes primary.

The best and most useful diplomats, upon occasion are men not attached to the State Department at all. The Navy, in the technical diplomatic sense, must leave to the Department of State the settlement of international policies, but in the practical operation of these policies the youngest naval officer commanding the smallest naval vessel in a foreign port might determine the action of our entire governmental machinery, independent of the policies which the trained diplomat might have planned. In many foreign ports the first American seen is an officer of the Navy. He is often called to places where no consul or other governmental official has ever gone. Here he incarnates the American government. Here he is Uncle Sam.

DURING this very year we have had a striking example of how the action of a single naval officer in a foreign country precipitated an issue not contemplated in diplomatic channels and irrevocably committed his government to a policy of action in support of him.

The demand by Admiral Mayo at Tampico for an apology and a public salute to the American flag was the culmination of the acts of unfriendliness shown by the Huertistas to the American government. To the support of that officer came every engine of the mighty government whose uniform he wore. Was not this higher honor and greater glory than all the royal orders of any knighthood bestowed for diplomatic prowess?

Doubtless the greatest diplomat the navy ever produced was Commodore Perry. When he sailed into Japanese history, via the harbor of Yeddo, he wrought a piece of diplomacy which, in its ultimate result, is comparable to the Louisiana Purchase and other great coups which will live in the pages of history for all time to come.

Perry's prediction that the people of Japan would come to consider us their friends is being borne out every day. Only a short time ago Admiral Howard, commanding the American fleet on the west coast of Mexico, reported that Captain Moriyama of the Japanese cruiser IDZUMO had announced that his government had been scrupulous in forbidding and preventing the shipment of arms and ammunition from Japan to Mexico, because of the friendship between Japan and the United States. This incident—only one of many—can be traced directly back to Commodore Perry and the exercise of his diplomacy.

THE conduct of Admiral Dewey, after he had won his victory at Manila Bay, is another illustration of the diplomatic attitude always characteristic of the American naval officer. He was the very genius of diplomacy in his dealings with Aguinaldo, and managed not to involve his government in any entangling alliances. Other diplomats of the highest rank who have lately written their names big upon the pages of naval history are Rear Admirals Fletcher and Fiske—Fletcher for his work at Vera Cruz, after the occupation of that city by our forces, and Fiske, for the able manner in which he prevented a revolution in San Domingo two years ago. But the list is entirely too long to repeat here. The examples mentioned will illustrate my point with reference to the necessity for the possession of diplomatic ability by naval officers.

IT is because I believe so implicitly in the need of diplomatic accomplishments for naval officers that I have tried in every manner possible to increase the range of usefulness of the naval War College. I want to see it not only the great graduate school in tactics, in strategy and in the art and conduct of war but also the great finishing school in the art and conduct of delicate diplomatic negotiations.

It is my hope that every man who studies at the War College will not fail to share with his brother officers who have been less fortunate the knowledge he has gained of how to act in those tense critical moments when war or peace hangs in the balance and when his may be the hand to sway this balance one way or the other.

Of the American naval officer one should be able to say, as did Lord Palmerston, England's great prime minister: "Whenever I want a thing well done, in a distant part of the world—when I want a man with a good head, a good heart, lots of pluck and plenty of common sense—I always send for a captain in the Navy."

JORDAN IS A HARD ROAD

By Sir Gilbert Parker

Author of The Right of Way, The Seats of the Mighty, etc

Illustrated by J. N. Marchand

"WHAT do you think of it, Doctor?"

The Young Doctor had just stepped from his buggy in front of the drug store in the main street of Askatoon. The quizzical question was followed by a round of laughter from a half-dozen noon-timers.

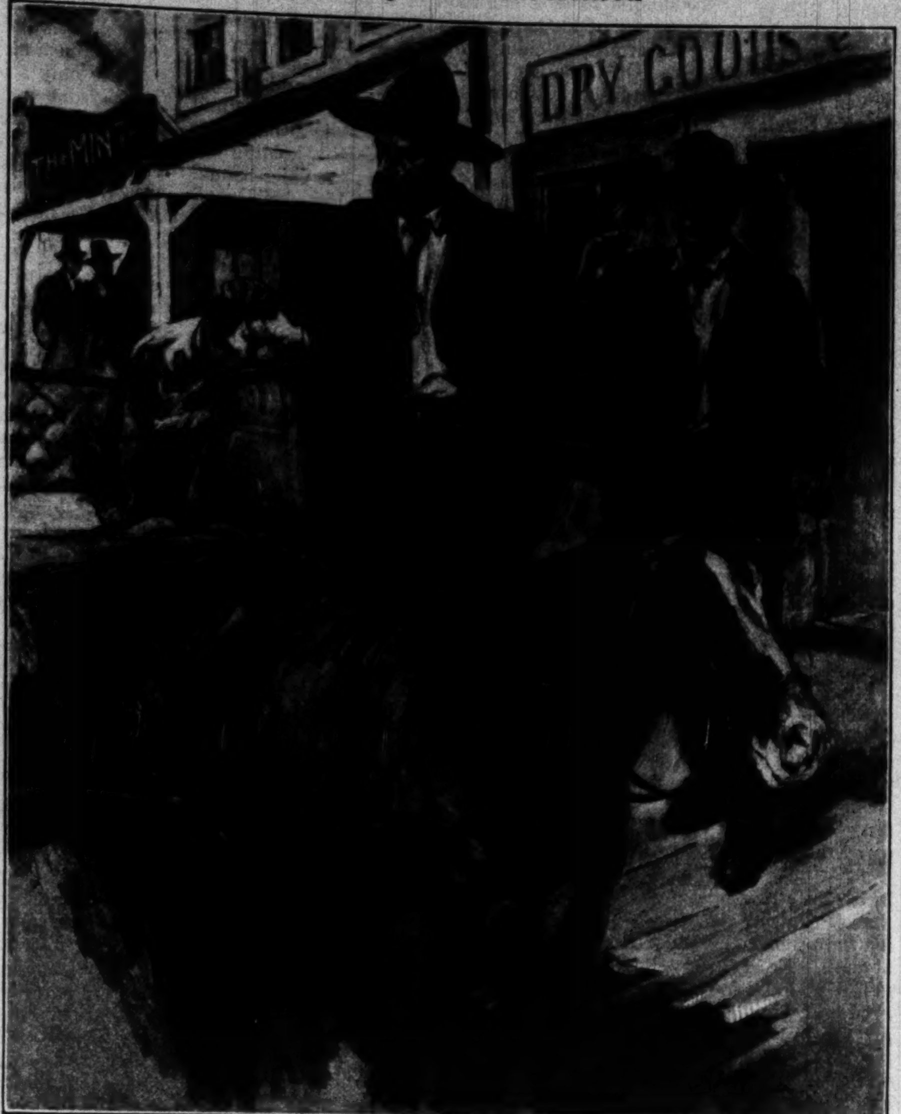
"I think it's mental deficiency," satirically answered the Young Doctor who, dusty from his drive and weary of face and mind from a long vigil at a bedside and a twenty-mile journey, was cheerful and dryly playful as ever. He had no idea what they were talking about.

"Shure, it looks like it," said old Patsy Kernaghan, "for what would he be doin' here?"

"What would who be doin' here, Patsy, and what looking like what?" asked the Young Doctor, with the look of one who suffered fools gladly and for some reason suffered this fool more gladly than others.

Patsy bridled. "Bill Minden—that's who! An' the top of his head must be gone an' the inside of his mind, that he'd be settlin' here. What would he be doin' here but watchin' the wheat grow! though to be sure there's three trains a day an' it's a sight to see y'r honour busy in the lambin' season."

THIS last reference to the Young Doctor's activity in shepherding the passage of new arrivals into the world and incidentally into Askatoon, produced a gale of laughter.



Without an instant's hesitation Minden's hand went quietly out above the dog's body as he murmured something, and then slowly found the head and ears

"Well, you'll not be thinkin' much of lambin' yourself, Patsy," responded the Young Doctor. "Whatever Mr. William Minden does, at your age and in your debased state of health yourself 'll be afther thinking of black horses with long tails and a carriage for one only." He always put on a slight Irish brogue when talking to Patsy Kernaghan.

"Aw, no, Doctor dear," drawled the old man, "let thim ride behind the black horses as never rode before. I'll be gettin' to me long home in a wheel-barra! There's more than one of thim that's got safe past you'll be glad to help put out o' sight what you've left of me."

"No, no, I'll keep you alive just to hear you talk in the foreign language you call your mother-tongue, Patsy," smiled the Young Doctor, having tied the halter of his grey mare to the hitching-post by the sidewalk. "But who is Mr. William Minden, and where does he come from?"

Two or three of the group sniggered and winked at each other, for who had not heard of Bill Minden, the notorious train and stage-coach robber, who faithfully kept the Sabbath day holy, and as faithfully made unholy every other day of the week when it served his purpose so to do. They knew that the Young Doctor loved to hear Patsy Kernaghan talk, for they both had come from the Emerald Isle.

"Mr. William Minden!" remarked Patsy scornfully. "Is it ye want to insult a stranger in the place? — I ask ye that. The wide wurruld knows Bill Minden as Bill Minden, without anny handle to his name and no William at all."

"Never heard of him," retorted the Young Doctor. "What's he done? Who is he?"

"Never hard of him!" exclaimed Kernaghan. "Never hard of Bill Minden! Wasn't it two years ago he stuck up the express down in Oregon? Didn't he rob the stage-coach a year ago at Lancy, and didn't ——"

"That wasn't proved," interjected a voice.

"An' the express business wasn't proved aither," declared Kernaghan; "an' after Bill left the court with tears in his beautiful eyes and not a stain on his character, didn't he own up to it, and give five hunderd dollars to an orphan children's home! Always doin' that kind of thing, isn't he, Father Roche — I'll say that of him, though he's a Protis'ant," he added with the air of doing a brave thing.

He had addressed his last words to a new arrival in the group round him — a priest, the much beloved priest who guarded and guided his very small Catholic flock at Askatoon.

"Ah, yes, yes, Kernaghan. He also gave five hundred dollars to the Confraternity of the Blessed Sacrament for the poor at Portland at the same time," responded Father Roche, who smilingly acknowledged the respectful salutations of the crowd.

"Thoughtful William," remarked the Young Doctor, shaking hands with Father Roche. "We could find use for his sympathies at Askatoon if he came our way."

PATSY threw up his hands. "Come our way! Aw, Doctor dear, what 've I been sayin' all this time, but that Bill Minden's here—here now in Askatoon! Settled here — come to stay — brought his ox and his ass an' everything that's his."

"Or not, as the case may be," rejoined the Young Doctor. "Where is he camped?"

"Shure, he's at the Sunbright Hotel — where else would a rich man like him be stayin'?"

The Young Doctor looked at Kernaghan quizzically. "Now how do you know he's rich? Seen the inside of his till—eh?"

Kernaghan grinned. "Aw, Doctor dear, does annyone think a man that's opened as manny tills as Bill Minden wouldn't have a full one of his own?"

"And what do you think he's come here for?" continued the Young Doctor. "You have a great head, Patsy. Now give it a chance. What is Bill Minden, the train robber, doing in Askatoon?"

Patsy reflected a minute scratching his head behind the ear. "Well, there's manny a busy man that's never had time to look at himself, an' he just steals away somewhere to a backwater to see his own face."

Father Roche smiled broadly. "Solitude and repentance, is that it, Kernaghan?"

Before Patsy could reply Jonas Billings, the livery-stable keeper, intervened. "Say, you call Astakoon a backwater, do you? Nothin' doin', eh? You'll get yourself disliked, Kernaghan, my friend."

"Shure, wouldn't it seem like a backwater to Minden," answered Patsy. "A man that's used to stoppin' a train or holdin' up a stage-coach 'd think Askatoon was a cimetairy."

"Has anyone seen him?" asked the Young Doctor. "What sort of a looking man is he?"

ONE or two mouths opened, but Patsy was not to be denied.

"Seen him! Isn't his face as well known as that of the Pope! Hasn't his fortygraf been in the papers for manny a year? Didn't I see him meself step aff the train here, an' didn't I look to see if he'd carry it away with him, ingine and all? Didn't I see him in Vancouver? What's he like? Well, his head's as big as a cushion, as black as jet — not a grey hair annywhere. Did ye ivir see pictures of the Dook o' Norfolk? Well, Bill Minden's like him, with a big black, bushy beard, spread out more than the Dook's, with beautiful black, bushy eyebrows that the Dook 'd have too if he let his grow — shure, I saw the Dook wance when he come to Maynooth. About five foot eleven Bill is — about the height of the Dook; but whin it comes to shoulders — aw well there y'are, the Dook just draps away to nawthing at all, an' he's a fine chist too. Bill has a chist like a house and a head like the cupoly at the tap of St. Peter's at Rome. Shure, it's a gran' sight to look at him. None o' your sky-scrapers, but somethin' like the fellow they called Atlas that carried the wurruld on his back — a hell of a fine fellow!"

He could get no further. A gust of laughter shook the crowd.

Patsy waved a hand at them all contemptuously. "He's a fine man that — whativir his past, he's a fine man. What was the wurrd he asked me afther he learned that I was Irish? 'Which is the way to the Cat'lic church?' he sez to me, an' I told him. 'Which is the way to the hotel?' he sez to me — 'to the Sunbright Hotel?' he sez to me; — an' I told him."

"Yes, but which way did he go?" asked the Young Doctor.

"He wint to the hotel — the man had to have a bed and a meal, hadn't he? But it shows the heart of him whin he asks his way to the Cat'lic church first."

"I have not noticed him in the vicinity," interjected Father Roche with mild irony.

"Bill Minden isn't a Catholic," grunted Billings, the livery-stable proprietor. "Say, I remember him on the Siwash River ten years ago. He's a Protes'ant, but he don't hold by church goin'. I've seen him sit right out on the stoop in front of the Mosquito Hotel at Siwash Junction, on a Sunday mornin', readin' his Bible with a church not three hunderd yards away, holdin' his own meetings. He'd sit there all mornin' readin' the bible — the old Testament it was; and p'raps sometimes he'd let out some commentory on what he read — maybe about Elijah or Nebuchednozzar or Boaz or Daniel or Abr'm; an' he wouldn't have any argyment about it. He'd just lay down the law, an' ye had to take it. He carries that little black bible round with him wherever he goes. He'd read it on a Sunday morning solemn and satisfied, an' on a Monday night he'd stick up a train all alone — walk right through a car scoopin' jewels and cash as he went. I suppose readin' on a Sunday mornin' about Saul and David havin' killed their thousands and their tens of thousands, give him the courage to spoil the Philistines on a Monday night. Nobody ever laughed at Bill for doin' what he done. It wasn't pretendin'. It suited him; he gloated on it; it was wine and milk to him. When he was in jail at Portland the learned, holy doctors used to come to convert him. Say, what a massacre it was when Bill turned his guns on 'em from Deuteronomy to Malachi! Start him on the Old Testament, get him in the gates of the holy places here in Askatoon, and see what he'll do. Why, that Bill Minden, train robber and roadman, knows the bible from Genesees to Luke, same as I know the road to Starwalt's saloon. Ez fur ez I can make out, regardless of his religion, Bill's real — all wool and two yards wide."

"THEN what's he doin' in Askatoon?" remarked Rigby, the chemist, in the doorway, at which there was further laughter.

The Young Doctor fanned himself with his straw hat and looked musingly at Kernaghan. "Patsy," said he, "we've got a problem here; it's the problem of sitting on both sides of a fence at once. From Bill Minden's past habits I gather that here at Askatoon we'll find him painting the town red on a Monday, and visiting the hospital, the jail, the prayer-meeting and the schools on a Tuesday. So far as I can see he'll have two mottos. One will be, 'Licensed to drink wine, beer and other spirituous and fermented liquors,' and the other will be, 'Home, sweet home.' Patsy, we shall have to keep an eye on this Minden."

Patsy nodded. "Faith, that's so. Now what was the first thing he done after he got to the hotel? The first thing he done was to march straight aff to the school — to the Central School. So you're right, Doctor dear. An' I wint with him — that's to say I wint behind him, walkin' in his wake. There he stood and watched the children comin' out of school — shure, it was only an hour ago. An' he smiled at thim an' patted their heads an' give away — aw, well he give away twenty or thirty five-cint pieces. Whin Miss Finley, the head teacher, come out — that's a fine girl, Cora Finley, a beautiful, strappin' girl, with handsome face an' an eye that'd light up an underground cave — whin she passed him standin' by the gate, he raised his hat aginst her, an' as nice a word he spoke of good-day-to-ye as ivir was spoke annywhere. Thin he watched her and watched her after she'd laughed back an answer at him, till she was out of sight by turnin' the carner. Now a man that'll do that, that'll just go straight to a schoolhouse almost before he's had time to take aff his boots in the town, well, that's a man ye'll have to think about twice. It's my opinion he'll be an outstandin' figure in the place."

"Let's hope he won't be a figure in an outstanding debt," remarked Father Roche quietly.

"Aw, there's manny a Protis'ant that's a good man — savin' your prisince," replied Patsy turning to Father Roche and misreading his mind.

"Do you know, Father Roche," said the Young Doctor musingly, "if we only knew exactly why a man did some certain thing in his life — perhaps some very small thing — we would know his whole character? Now, perhaps if we knew exactly why Bill Minden went to that school this afternoon we should have a book of revelations."

"Well, there he is now. You can ask him," declared Patsy. "That's him on the other side of the street."

Slowly, with a kind of loose dignity and yet with a smack of assertion, owing to a curious bending of the legs, Bill Minden was approaching across the way. There was something singularly self-contained and self-sufficient about the man, yet there was nothing repellent. Indeed, there was a unique kindliness — the kindliness of a chieftain or a patriarch — in the expression of his hard-bitten face. He took no notice of the crowd watching him, and appeared not to see them. On the other side of the street, almost opposite the group of gossips, were a horse and buggy. On the seat of the buggy was a dog of some size and a marked ferocity of appearance. While Minden was passing the buggy he stepped towards it, holding out his hand as though to stroke the dog. A voice behind him suddenly called out, "Don't touch him; he'll bite," as the sullen brute raised its head. Without an instant's hesitation Minden's hand went quietly out above the dog's body as he murmured something, and then slowly found the head and ears. The action had been very swift yet gentle, and the voice had been monotonously even, with a curious, rough melody. Presently the snarl left the dog's mouth, the teeth ceased to show, and he wagged his tail as Minden turned with a smile to its terrified owner.

"Like a dog I had once," he said, and moved on.

As he did so, Jonas Billings shouted, "Hooray!"

Minden turned and twenty hands were waved in greeting across the street towards him. He waved back nonchalantly and passed on his way. .

CHAPTER II.

THE REASON WHY.

THE good humour which marked Minden's entrance into the life of Askatoon continued through the months that followed. His habits were commendable. He neither drank, nor chewed tobacco, and even his enemies were forced to acknowledge that his outer conduct was above suspicion. He interested himself conspicuously in good works, though, in spite of his apparent honest sympathy, there was an inevitable feeling abroad that his entry into this field was like the invasion of a millinery shop by a buffalo. That, however, did not prevent every friend of every charity from "bleeding" him successfully. It was noted that never but once did he go to church or prayer-meeting. He had asked Patsy Kernaghan the way to the Catholic church on the day of his arrival, but there the matter ended, though Patsy still regarded the incident with almost superstitious reverence. Of a Sunday morning at the Sunbright Hotel, however, Minden sat on the verandah wearing his best coat and adorned by a collar; at other times, because of his heavy beard, he wore nothing so useless as a collar; and in the presence of all and sundry he read his black leather-bound bible. There was no lurking irony or suggestive self-consciousness in his looks as he entered upon, or as he continued, his task. It was done as naturally as eating a meal, and he took no notice of those who gazed at him. If, however, some natural son of Adam engaged him in conversation on some scriptural topic, — particularly of the Old Testament — he did not fail to lay down the sacred law according to William Minden, assisted by the prophets major and minor.

Once only a stranger ventured to scoff. He had come from the Border, had cheered himself with pregnant refreshment and had then begun to chaff the quiescent Bill. At last he asked Bill to give him a tip for the Heavenly race, and added that Jordan was a hard road to travel. Whereupon Bill rose, laid down his bible gently and said, "You shall have the tip, my son," and with his foot catching the feet and ankle of the scoffer, tipped him over the verandah-rail into a barrel of rainwater. As the scoffer scrambled out, raging and bedraggled, Bill, leaning over the verandah, said, "You poisonous pimp of the pampas, if it wasn't the Sabbath I'd carve your cursed cuticle!"

THOUGH the phrases Bill used were so sensationally picturesque and gave evidence of finished preparation, they were, on the contrary, impromptu. They represented a natural gift, developed by long practice, for manufacturing strange phrases and oaths. This gift had been a real asset in his life at Askatoon. It had been used at first privately, but it ultimately achieved him a reputation at a public meeting called in the interest of cheaper freight rates on the railway. There, his choice of phrases, happily emphasized by a little polite profanity, started him on a popular career as a public man. There were those who opposed his progress, but they were highly religious people, mostly newcomers from the east, who regarded his criminal career with horror, and who disbelieved that a man with such a past could be trusted until he had been officially saved by Divine Grace. Joined with them in this feeling was the mother of Cora Finley, the young teacher to whom Minden had spoken on the day of his arrival.

Mrs. Finley had set her face against Minden ever since Cora came home telling of the strange but interesting man who had watched her and the school children leave the school, the day's work done. Mrs. Finley's agitation when she afterwards saw Minden, and her subsequent marked antipathy, might reasonably have been due to the fact that she was very religious and resented the interest he took in the schools, and, incidentally, in her popular offspring.

THERE was nothing pronounced in Minden's interest in the girl. He was always respectful to her, indeed almost ostentatiously so; and though he visited other schools regularly, he visited the Central School, at which she taught, far more often than any other. Recitations were part of each Friday's programme in the schools, and he not only listened to these recitations, but at last told stories himself — yarns of his own life, expurgated and edited for the occasion. They were adventures of surprising interest — sensational incidents clothed in his own vernacular, decorated by his alliterative facility. A clo observer would have noticed that while he was th engaged, though he appeared not to look at Co (who welcomed his coming each week with almo unreasonable pleasure) he seemed yet to be conscio when her eyes were on him, or when her attenti was diverted, apprehending all she did by feeli rather than by sight.

There were parents who objected to these visi tions, but the majority were tickled, as they c loquially said, at an ex-criminal and notorious a venturer playing the part of school visitor, chee fully supported him and put to rout his critics. O day, however, something made him more than ev the talk of the town. It was the announcement th he would stand for the office of school-trustee. was made only a few days before the election f trustees, and not in all the days that Askatoon h known was there such a day as that in which t election occurred. He was determined to have t right to visit the schools with or without the a proval of the "pious pedantics," as he called them.

"I see what's in his mind," said Patsy Kernagh to the Young Doctor.

"You have a wonderful eye, Patsy," responded t other. "There's no good (Continued on page 27

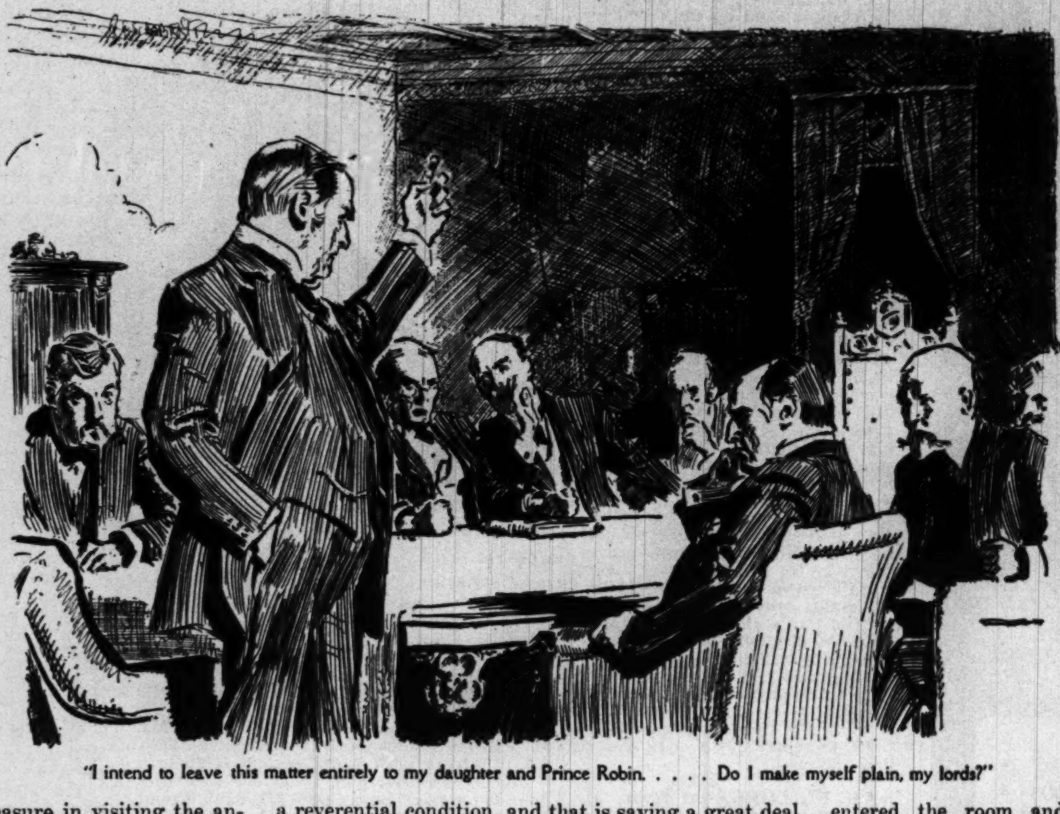
CHAPTER XXII.

A VISIT TO THE CASTLE.

MR. BLITHERS indeed experienced plain sailing for the ensuing twenty hours. It was not until just before he set forth at two the next afternoon to attend, by special appointment, a meeting of the cabinet in the council chamber at the Castle that he encountered the first symptom of squalls ahead.

He had sent his secretary to the Castle with a brief note suggesting an early conference. It naturally would be of an informal character, as there was no present business before them. The contracts had already been signed by the government and by his authorized agents. So far as the loan was concerned there was nothing more to be said. Everything was settled. True, it was still necessary to conform to a certain custom by having the Prince affix his signature to the contract over the Great Seal of State, but as he previously had signed an agreement in New York this brief act was of a more or less perfunctory nature.

The deposit of bonds by the state and its people would follow in course of time, as prescribed by contract, and Mr. Blithers was required to place in the Bank of Graustark, on such and such a date, the sum of three million pounds sterling. Everybody was satisfied with the terms of the contract. Mr. Blithers was to get what really amounted to nearly nine per cent on a gilt-edged investment, and Graustark was to preserve its integrity and retain its possessions.



"I intend to leave this matter entirely to my daughter and Prince Robin. . . . Do I make myself plain, my lords?"

THERE was a distant cloud on the financial horizon, however, a vague shadow at present,— but prophetic of storm. It was perfectly clear to the nobles that when these bonds matured, Mr. Blithers would be in a position to exact payment, and as they matured in twelve years from date he was likely to be pretty much alive and kicking when the hour of reckoning arrived.

Mr. Blithers was in the mood to be amiable. He anticipated considerable pleasure in visiting the ancient halls of his prospective grandchildren. During the forenoon he had taken a motor ride about the city with Mrs. Blithers, accompanied by a guide who created history for them with commendable glibness and some veracity, and pointed out the homes of great personages as well as the churches, monuments and museums. He also told them in a confidential undertone that the Prince was expected to marry a beautiful American girl and that the people were enchanted with the prospect! That sly bit of information realized ten dollars for him at the end of the trip, aside from his customary fee.

The first shock to the placidity of Mr. Blithers came with the brief note in reply to his request for an informal conference. The Lord Chamberlain curtly informed him that the Cabinet would be in session at two and would be pleased to grant him an audience of half an hour, depending on his promptness in appearing.

Mr. Blithers was not accustomed to being granted audiences. He had got into the habit of having them thrust upon him. It irritated him tremendously to have anyone measure time for him. Why, even the President of the United States, the Senate, or the District Attorney of New York couldn't do that for him. And here was a whippersnapper Lord Chamberlain telling him that the Cabinet would grant him half an hour! He managed to console himself, however, with the thought that matters would not always be as they were at present. There would be a decided change of tune later on.

It would be folly to undertake the depiction of Mr. Blithers' first impressions of the Castle and its glories, both inside and out. To begin with, he lost no small amount of his assurance when he discovered that the great gates in the wall surrounding the park were guarded by resplendent dragoons who politely demanded his "pass." After the officer in charge had inspected the Lord Chamberlain's card as if he had never seen one before, he ceremoniously indicated to a warden that the gates were to be opened. There was a great clanking of chains, the drawing of iron bolts, the whirl of a windlass, and the ponderous gates swung slowly ajar.

Mr. Blithers caught his breath — and from that instant until he found himself crossing the great hall in the wake of an attendant delegated to conduct him to the council chamber his sensations are not to be described. It is only necessary to say that he was in a reverential condition, and that is saying a great deal for Mr. Blithers. A certain bombastic confidence in himself gave way to mellow timidity. He was in a new world. He was cognizant of a distinct sensation of awe. His ruthless Wall Street tread became a mincing, uncertain shuffle; he could not conquer the absurd notion that he ought to tiptoe his way about these ancient halls with their thick, velvety rugs and whispering shadows.

Everywhere about him was pomp, visible and invisible. It was in the great stairway, the vaulted ceilings, the haughty pillars, over all of which was the sheen of an age that surpassed his comprehension. Rigid servitors watched his progress through the vast spaces — men with grim, unsmiling faces. He knew, without seeing, that this huge pile was alive with noble lord and ladies; the Court! Gallantry and beauty to mock him with their serene indifference!

Somewhere in this great house beautiful women were idling, or feasting, or dreaming. He was conscious of their presence all about him, and shrank slightly as he wondered if they were scrutinizing his ungainly person. He was suddenly ashamed of his tight-fitting cutaway coat and striped trousers. Really he ought to get a new suit! These garments were much small for him.

Were ironic eyes taking in the fresh creases in those New York trousers? Were they regarding his shimmering patent leather shoes with an intelligence that told them that he was in pain? Were they wondering how much he weighed and why he didn't unbutton his coat when he must have known that it would look better if it didn't pinch him so tightly across the breast? Above all things, were they smiling at the corpulent part of him that preceded the rest of his body, clad in an immaculate waistcoat? He never had felt conspicuous in his life, nor so certain that he was out of place.

Coming in due time — and with a grateful heart — to a small ante-chamber, he was told to sit down and wait. He sat down very promptly. In any other house he would have sauntered around, looking at the emblems, crests and shields that hung upon the walls. But now he sat and wondered. He wondered whether this could be William W. Blithers. Was this one of the richest men in the world —this fellow sitting here with his hands folded tightly across his waistcoat? He was forced to admit that it was and at the same time it wasn't.

The attendant returned and he was ushered into a second chamber, at the opposite end of which was a large, imposing door — closed. Beside this door stood a slim, erect figure in the red, blue and gold uniform of an officer of the Castle guard. As Mr. Blithers approached this rigid figure, he recognized a friend and a warm glow pervaded his heart. There could be no mistaking the smart mustache and supercilious eyebrows. It was Lieutenant Dank.

"HOW do you do?" said Mr. Blithers. "Glad to see you again." His voice sounded unnatural. He extended his hand.

Dank gave him a ceremonious salute, bowed slightly but without a smile, and then threw open the door.

"Mr. Blithers, my lords," he announced, and stood aside to let the stranger in a strange land pass within.

A number of men were seated about a long table in the center of this imposing chamber. No one arose as Mr. Blithers entered the room and stopped just inside the door. He heard it close gently behind him. He was at a loss for the first time in his life. He didn't know whether he was to stop just inside the door fingering his hat like a messenger boy, or go forward and join the group. His gaze fell upon a huge oaken chair at the far end of the table. It was the only unoccupied seat that came within the scope of his rather limited vision. He could not see anything beyond the table and the impassive group that surrounded it. Was it possible that the big chair was intended for him? If so, how small and insignificant he would look upon it. He had a ghastly notion that his feet would not touch the floor, and he went so far as to venture the hope that there would be a substantial round somewhere about midway from the bottom.

He had appeared before the inquisitorial committees in the United States Senate, and had not been oppressed by the ponderous gravity of the investigators. He had faced the Senators without a tremor of awe. He had even regarded them with a confidence, equal if not superior to their own. But now he faced a calm, impassive group of men who seemed to strip him down to the flesh with a cool, piercing interest, and who were in no sense impressed by what they saw.

Despite his nervousness he responded to the lifelong habit of calculation. He counted the units in the group in a single, rapid glance, and found that there were eleven. Eleven lords of the realm! Eleven stern, dignified, unsmiling strangers to the arrogance of William W. Blithers! Something told him at once that he could not spend an informal half-hour with them. Grim, striking, serious visages, all of them! The last hope for his well-fed American humor flickered and died. He knew that it would never do to regale them in an informal off-hand way — as he had planned — with examples of native wit.

Reverting to the precise moment of his entrance to the Castle, we find Mr. Blithers saying to himself that there wasn't the slightest use in even hoping that he might be invited to transfer his lodgings from the Regengetz to the Royal bed-chambers. The chance of being invited to dine there seemed to dwindle as well. While he sat and waited in the first ante-chamber he even experienced strange misgivings in respect to parental privileges later on.

After what appeared to him to be an interminable length of time, but in reality no more than a few seconds, a tall man arose from his seat and advanced with outstretched hand. Mr. Blithers recognized Count Quinnox, the Minister of War. He shook that friendly hand with a fervor that must have surprised the Count. Never in all his life had he been so glad to see anyone.

"How are you, my lord," said the king of finance, fairly meek with gratefulness.

"Excellently well, Mr. Blithers," returned the Count. "And you?"

"Never better, never better," said Mr. Blithers, again pumping the Count's hand up and down — with even greater heartiness than before. "Glad to see you. Isn't it a pleasant day? I was telling Mrs. Blithers this morning that I'd never seen a pleasanter day. We——"

"Let me introduce you to my colleagues, Mr. Blithers," interrupted the Count.

"Happy, I'm sure," mumbled Mr. Blithers. To save his life, he couldn't tell what had got into him. He had never acted like this before.

The Count was mentioning the names of dukes, counts and barons, and Mr. Blithers was bowing profoundly to each in turn. No one offered to shake hands with him, although each rose politely, even graciously. They even smiled. He remembered that very well afterwards. They smiled kindly, almost benignly. He suddenly realized what had got into him. It was respect.

"A chair, Franz," said the white haired, gaunt man who was called Baron Romano. "Will you sit here, Mr. Blithers? Pray forgive our delay in admitting you. We were engaged in a rather serious discussion over——"

"Oh, that's all right," said Mr. Blithers, magnanimously. "Am I interfering with any important business, gent — my lords? If so, just——"

"Not at all, Mr. Blithers. Pray be seated."

"Sure I'm not taking anyone's seat?"

"A secretary's, sir. He can readily find another."

MR. BLITHERS sat down. He was rather pleased to find that the big chair was not meant for him. A swift intuition told him that it was reserved for the country's ruler.

"The Prince signed the contracts just before you arrived, Mr. Blithers," said Baron Romano. "The seal has been affixed to each of the documents, and your copy is ready for delivery any time."

Mr. Blithers recovered himself slightly. "You may send it to the hotel, Baron, at any time tomorrow. My lawyers will have a look at it." Then he made haste to explain: "Not that it is really necessary, but just as a matter of form. Besides, it gives the lawyers something to do." He sent an investigating glance around the room.

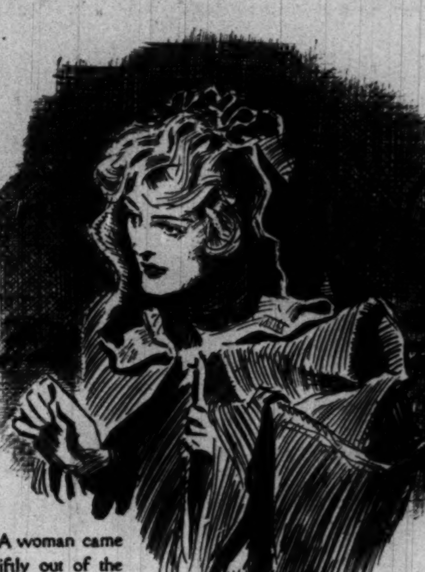
"The Prince has retired," said the Baron, divining the thought. "He does not remain for the discussions." Glancing at the huge old clock above the door, the Prime Minister assumed a most business-like air. "It will doubtless gratify you to know that three-fourths of the bonds have been deposited, Mr. Blithers, and the remainder will be gathered in during the week. Holders living in remote corners of our country have not as yet been able to reach us with their securities. A week will give them sufficient time, will it not, Count Lazzar?"

"I may safely say that all of the bonds will be in our hands by next Tuesday at the latest," said the Minister of the Treasury. He was a thin, ascetic man; his keen eyes were fixed rather steadily upon Mr. Blithers. After a moment's pause, he went on: "We are naturally interested in your extensive purchases of our outstanding bonds, Mr. Blithers. I refer to the big blocks you acquired in London, Paris and Berlin."

"Want to know what I bought them for?" inquired Mr. Blithers amiably.

"We have wondered not a little at your readiness to invest such a fortune in our securities."

"Well, there you have it. Investment, that's all. Your credit is sound, your resources unquestioned, your bonds gilt-edge. I am glad of the opportunity to take a few dollars out of Wall street uncertainties and put 'em into something absolutely certain. Groo — Gras — er — Groostock bonds are pretty safe things to have lying in a safety vault in these times of financial unrest. They create a pretty solid fortune for my family, — that is to say, for my daughter and her children. A sensible business man, — and I claim to be one, — looks ahead, my lords. Railroads are all right as long as you are alive and can run them yourself. It's after you are dead that they fail to do what is expected of them. New fingers get into the pie, and you never can tell what they'll pull out in their greediness. I cannot imagine anything safer in the shape of an investment than the bonds of a nation that has a debt of less than fifty million dollars. As a citizen of a republic whose national debt is nearly a billion, I can't see how you've managed so well."



A woman came swiftly out of the blackness and stopped beside the cab

"We are so infinitesimal, Mr. Blithers, that I daresay we could be lost in the smallest of your states," said Baron Romano, with a smile.

"Rhode Island is pretty small," Mr. Blithers informed him, without a smile.

"It is most gratifying to Graustark to know that you value our securities so highly as a legacy," said Count Lazzar, suavely. "May I venture the hope, however, that your life may be prolonged beyond the term of their existence? They expire in a very few years — a dozen, in fact."

"Oh, I think I can hang on that long," said Mr. Blithers, a little more at ease. He was saying to himself that these fellows were not so bad, after all. "Still one never knows. I may be dead in a year. My daughter—but, of course, you will pardon me if I don't go into my private affairs. I fear I have already said too much."

"On the contrary sir, we are all only too willing to be edified. The workings of an intelligence such as yours cannot fail to be of interest to us who are so lacking in the power to cope with great undertakings. I confess to a selfish motive in asking you about your methods of — er — investment," said the Minister of Finance. Mr. Blithers failed to see that he was shrewdly being led up to a matter that was of more importance to Graustark just then than anything along financial lines.

"I am only too willing, my lords, to give you the benefit of my experience. Any questions that you may care to ask, I'll be glad to answer to the best of my ability. It is only natural that I should take a great personal interest in Graustock from now on. I want to see the country on the boom. I want to see it taking advantage of all the opportunities that—er—come its way. There may be a few pointers that William W. Blithers can give you in respect to your railways and mines—and your general policy, perhaps. I hope you won't hesitate about asking."

THE Prime Minister tapped reflectively upon the table-top with his fingers for a moment or two.

"Thank you," he said. "We are at this very moment in something of a quandary in respect to the renewal of a treaty with one of our neighbors. For the past twenty years we have been in alliance with our next door neighbors, Axphain on the north and Dawsbergen on the south and east. The triple alliance will end this year unless renewed. Up to the present our relations have been most amicable. Axphain stands ready to extend our mutual protective agreement for another term of years, but Dawsbergen is lukewarm and inclined to withdraw. When you become better acquainted with the politics of our country you will understand how regrettable such an action on the part of a hitherto friendly government will be."

"What's the grievance?" inquired Mr. Blithers, bluntly. He was edging into familiar waters now. "What's the matter with Dawsbergen? Money controversy?"

"Not at all," said Lazzar hastily.

"Why not let 'em withdraw?" said Mr. Blithers. "We can get along without them."

There was a general uplifting of heads at the use of the pronoun, and a more fixed concentration of gaze.

"I daresay you are already acquainted with the desire on the part of Dawsbergen to form an alliance in which Axphain can have no part," said Baron Romano. "In other words, it has been the desire of both Dawsbergen and Graustark to perfect a matrimonial alliance that may cement the fortunes of the two countries."

"Count Quinnox mentioned something of the sort," interrupted Mr. Blithers. "But suppose this matrimonial alliance doesn't come off, who would be the sufferer, you or Dawsbergen? Who will it benefit the most?"

There was a moment's silence. Doubtless it had never occurred to the Ministry to speculate on the point.

"Dawsbergen is a rich, powerful country," said Romano. "We will be the gainers by such an alliance, Mr. Blithers."

"I dont go much on alliances," said the capitalist. "I believe in keeping out of them if possible."

"I see," said the Baron reflectively. There was another silence. Then: "It has come to our notice in a most direct manner that the Prince of Dawsbergen feels that his friendly consideration of a proposal made by our government some years ago is being disregarded in a manner that can hardly be anything but humiliating to him, not only as a sovereign but as a father."

"He's the one who has the marriageable daughter, eh? I had really forgotten the name."

The Baron leaned forward, still tapping the table-top with his long, slim fingers.

"The report that Prince Robin is to marry your daughter, Mr. Blithers, has reached his ears. It is only natural that he should feel resentful. For fifteen years there has been an understanding that the Crown Princess of Dawsbergen and the Prince of Graustark were one day to be wedded to each other. You will admit that the present reports are somewhat distressing to him and unquestionably so to the Crown Princess."

Mr. Blithers settled back in his chair. "It seems to me that he is making a mountain out of a molehill."

Baron Romano shrank preceptibly. "It devolves upon me, sir, as spokesman for the Ministry, the court and the people of Graustark, to inform you that marriage between our Prince and any other than Crown Princess of Dawsbergen is not to be considered as possible."

Mr. Blithers stared. "Hasn't the Prince any voice in the matter?" he demanded.

"Yes. He has already denied, somewhat publicly, that he is not contemplating marriage with your daughter. He has had a voice in the matter at least."

A fine moisture started out on the purplish brow of Mr. Blithers. Twenty-two eyes were upon him. He realized that he was not attending an informal conference. He had been brought here for a deliberate purpose.

"I may be permitted the privilege of reminding you, my lords, that his denial was no more emphatic than that expressed by my daughter," he said, with real dignity.

"We have accepted her statement as final, but it is our earnest desire that the minds of the people be set at rest," said the Baron gravely. "I sincerely trust that you will appreciate our position, Mr. Blithers. It is not our desire or intention to offend in this matter, but we believe it to be only fair and just that we should understand each other at the outset. The impression is afoot that——"

"My lords," said Mr. Blithers, rising, his face suddenly pale, "I beg leave to assure you that my daughter's happiness is of far more importance to me than all the damned principalities in the world. Just a moment, please. I apologize for the oath — but I mean it, just the same. I do not resent your attitude, nor do I resent your haste in conveying to me your views on the subject. It may be diplomacy to go straight to a question and get it over with, but it isn't always diplomatic to go off half-cocked. I will say, with perfect candor, that I should like to see my daughter the Princess of Graustark, but — by George! I want you to understand that her own wishes in the matter are to govern mine in the end. I have had this marriage in mind, there's no use denying it. I have schemed to bring these two young people together with a simple object in view. I knew that if they saw enough of each other they would fall in love, and they would want the happiness that love brings to all people. Just a moment, Baron! I want to say to you now, all of you, that if my girl should love your prince and he should love her in return, there isn't a power below heaven that can keep them apart. If she doesn't love him, and he should be unlucky enough to love her, I'd see him hanged before he could have her. I'll admit that I have counted on seeing all of this come to pass, and that I have bungled the thing pretty badly because I'm a loving, selfish father, — but, my lords, since you have brought me here to tell me that it is impossible for my girl to marry your prince, I will say to you, here and now, that if they ever love each other and want to get married, I'll see to it that it isn't impossible. You issue an ultimatum to me, in plain words, so I'll submit one to you, in equally plain words. I intend to leave this matter entirely to my daughter and Prince Robin. They are to do the deciding, so far as I am concerned. And if they decide that they love each other and want to get married, they will get married. Do I make myself perfectly plain, my lords?"

The dignified Ministry of Graustark sat agape. With his concluding words, Mr. Blithers deposited his clenched fist upon the table with a heavy thud, and, as if fascinated, every eye shifted from his face to the white knuckles of that resolute hand.

Baron Romano also arose. "You place us in the extremely distressing position of being obliged to oppose the hand of a benefactor, Mr. Blithers. You have come to our assistance in a time of need. You have——"

"If it is the loan you are talking about, Baron, that is quite beside the question," interrupted Mr. Blithers. "I do not speculate. I may have had a personal motive in lending you this money, but I don't believe you will find that it enters into the contract we have signed. I don't lend money for charity's sake. I sometimes give it to charity, but when it comes to business, I am not charitable. I have made a satisfactory loan and I am not complaining. You may leave out the word benefactor, Baron. It doesn't belong in the game."

"As you please, sir," said Romano coldly. "We were only intent upon conveying to you our desire to maintain friendly relations with you, Mr. Blithers, despite the unpleasant conditions that have arisen. I may at least question your right to assume that we are powerless to prevent a marriage that is manifestly unpopular with the subjects of Prince Robin."

"I had it on excellent authority today that the people are not opposed to the union of my daughter and the prince," said Mr. Blithers.

"I am compelled to say that you have been misinformed," said the Baron, flatly.

"I think I have not been misinformed, however, concerning the personal views of Prince Robin. If I am not mistaken, he openly declares that he will marry to suit himself and not the people of Graustark. Isn't it barely possible, my lords, that he may have something to say about who he is to marry?"

"I confess that his attitude is all that you describe," said the Baron. "He has announced his views quite plainly. We admit that he may have something to say about it."

"Then I submit that it isn't altogether an improbability that he may decide to marry according to the dictates of his heart and not for the sake of appearances," said Mr. Blithers scathingly. "I have an idea that he will marry the girl he loves, no matter who she may be."

Count Quinnox and Baron Gourou exchanged glances. These two men were guilty of having kept from their colleagues all information concerning a certain Miss Guile. They, as well as Dank, were bound by a promise exacted by their sovereign prince. They alone knew that Mr. Blithers was supported by an incontrovertible truth. For the present, their lips were sealed, and yet they faced that anxious group with a complete understanding of the situation. They knew that Mr. Blithers was right. Prince Robin would marry the girl that he loved, and no other. They were agreed that their prince expected to marry the daughter of the man who now faced these proud noblemen and virtually defied them!

"Am I not right, Count Quinnox?" demanded Mr. Blithers, turning suddenly upon the Minister of War. "You are in a position to know something about him. Am I not right?"

Every eye was on the Count. "Prince Robin will marry for love, my lords," he said quietly. "I am forced to agree with Mr. Blithers."

Baron Romano sank into his chair. There was silence in the room for many seconds.

"May I enquire, Count Quinnox, if you know anything of the present state of Prince Robin's — er — heart?" inquired the Prime Minister finally.

"I can only surmise," said he briefly.

"Has — has he met some one in whom he feels a — er — an interest?"

"Yes."

"May we have the benefit of your conclusions?" said Baron Romano, icily.

"I am not at liberty to supply information at present," said the Count, visibly distressed.

MR. BLITHERS leaned forward, his hands upon the table. "Some one he met after leaving New York?" he inquired eagerly.

"Time will reveal everything, Mr. Blithers," said the Count, and closed his jaws resolutely. His colleagues looked at him in consternation. The worst, then, had happened!

A gleam of triumph shot into the eyes of Mr. Blithers. His heart swelled. He felt himself stepping out upon safe, solid ground after a period of floundering. The very best, then, had happened!

"My lords, I find that my half-hour is almost up," he said, pulling out his gold watch and comparing its time with that of the clock on the wall. "Permit me to take my departure. I am content to let matters shape themselves as they may. Shakespeare says 'there is a destiny that shapes our ends, rough hew them' — er — and so forth. Allow me, however, before leaving, to assure you of my most kindly interest in the welfare of your State. You may be pleased to know that it is not from me that Graustark — did I get it right that time? — will redeem her bonds when they mature, but from my only daughter. She is nearly twenty-one years of age. On her twenty-fifth birthday I shall present to her — as a gift — all of my holdings in Graustark. She may do as she sees fit with them. Permit me to wish you all good day, my lords. You may send the contract to my hotel, Baron. I expect to remain in the city for some time."

As he traversed the vast halls on his way to the outer world, he was again overcome by the uneasy conviction that ironic eyes were looking out upon him from luxurious retreats. Again he felt that his coat fitted him too tightly and that his waistcoat was painfully in evidence. He hurried a bit. If he could have had his way about it, he would have run. Once outside the castle doors, he lighted a big cigar, and threw the burnt out match upon the polished flagstones of the terrace. He regretted the act on the instant. He wished he had not thrown it there. If the solemn grooms had not been watching, he would have picked it up and stuck it into his pocket for disposal on the less hallowed stones of a city thoroughfare.

Outside the gates he felt more at ease, more at home, in fact. He smoked in great contentment. In the broad, shady avenue he took out his watch and pried

10% More for Your Money

Quaker Oats is put up also in a 25-cent size, nearly three times as large as the 10-cent size. By saving in packing it offers you 10 per cent more for your money. See how long it lasts.

Precious Vim-Food

If Quaker Oats Cost What Vitality is Worth You'd Weigh It on Gold Dust Scales

Quaker Oats is so plentiful—so cheap—that some forget its value.

Remember this: Each flake contains phosphorus, of which brains are made. Each is laden with lecithin, of which nerves are made. And each is stored with energy.

As a vim-producer—as a source of vitality—nothing else grown can compare with it.

These are precious elements. Their dearth or abundance may affect a child's whole career. One child may be languid—one "feel his oats." And the difference may lie in large part in their breakfasts.

Besides that, the child who lacks Quaker Oats—or gets it too rarely—misses one of the luxuries of life.

Quaker Oats

The Morning Luxury

Two things are important as regards this dish. One is to get Quaker Oats. It is made of the big, plump grains alone, so the flakes are large and luscious. All puny grains are discarded. We get but ten pounds of Quaker Oats from a bushel.

The result is a flavor, an aroma which delights the child. They love the dish. You can't serve it too often or serve too much.

Then serve Quaker Oats in big dishes.

Quaker Cooker

We have made to our order—from pure Aluminum—a perfect Double Boiler. It is extra large and heavy. We supply it to users of Quaker Oats, for cooking these flakes in the ideal way. It insures the fullness of food value and flavor. See our offer in each package.

Children need an abundance. Most of them don't realize the full effect of this vim-food because they don't get enough.

The elements are there—all the elements needed for brains and nerves and bodies. Don't skimp on them. Let children eat all they will.

For 30 days, try serving Quaker Oats in plenty. That test will show you what this food can do.

open the case. A great pride filled his eyes as he looked upon the dainty miniature portrait of his daughter Maude. She was lovely — she was even lovelier than he had ever thought before.

At the Regengetz a telegram awaited him. It was from Maude.

"I shall be in Edelweiss this week without fail. I have something very important to tell you." So it read.

CHAPTER XXIII.

(PINGARI'S.)

NINE o'clock of a rainy night, on the steep, winding road that climbed the mountainside from the walled-in city to the crest on which stood the famed monastery of St. Valentine, — nine o'clock of a night fraught with pleasurable anticipation on the part of one R. Schmidt, whose eager progress up the slope was all too slow notwithstanding the encouragement offered by the conscienceless Jehu who frequently beat his poor steed into a gallop over level stretches and never allowed them to pause on the cruel grades.

Late in the afternoon there had come to the general postoffice a letter for Mr. R. Schmidt. He had told her that any message intended for him would reach his hands if directed to the postoffice. The missive was brief. She merely acquainted him with the fact that she had arrived in Edelweiss that day from Ganlook, twenty miles away, and was stopping at the Inn of the Stars outside the city gates and half way up the mountainside, preferring the quiet, ancient tavern to the stately Regengetz for reasons of her own.

In closing she said that she would be delighted to see him when it was convenient for him to come to her. On receipt of this singularly matter-of-fact letter, he promptly despatched a message to Miss Guile, Inn of the Stars, saying that she might expect him at nine that night.

Fortunately for him, the night was wet and blustering. He donned a raincoat, whose cape and collar served to cover the lower part of his face fairly well, and completed his disguise by pulling far down over his eyes the villainous broad-brimmed hat affected by the shepherds in the hills. He had a pair of dark eyeglasses in reserve for the crucial test that would come with his entrance to the Inn.

Stealing away from the Castle at eight, he entered the ramshackle cab that Hobbs had engaged for the expedition, and which awaited him not far from the private entrance to the Park. Warders at the gate looked askance as he passed them by, but not one presumed to question him. They winked slyly at each other, however, after he had disappeared in the shadows beyond the rays of the feeble lanterns that they carried. It was good to be young!

The driver of that rattling old vehicle was no other than the versatile Hobbs, who, it appears, had rented the outfit for a fixed sum, guaranteeing the owner against loss by theft, fire or dissolution. It is not even remotely probable that the owner would have covered the ground so quickly as Hobbs, and it is certain that the horses never suspected that they had it in them.

The mud-covered vehicle was nearing the Inn of the Stars when Robin stuck his head out of the vehicle and directed Hobbs to drive slower.

"Very good, sir," said Hobbs. "I thought as how we might be late after losing time at the city gates, sir, wot with that silly guard and the ——"

"We are in good time, Hobbs. Take it easy."

The lights of the Inn were gleaming through the drizzle not more than a block away. Robin's heart was thumping furiously. Little chills ran over him, delicious chills of excitement. His blood was hot and cold, his nerves were tingling. The adventure!

"Whoa!" said Hobbs suddenly. "'Ello, wot the 'ell is ——"

"Is this Mr. Schmidt's carriage?" demanded a hoarse, suppressed voice.

"It is," said Hobbs, "for the time being. Wot of it?"

Robin's head came through the window.

"What do you want?"

"Some one is coming out here to meet you, sir. Do not drive up to the doors. Those are the orders. You are to wait here, if you please."

Then the man shot away into the darkness, leaving the wayfarers mystified by his words and action.

"Wot am I to do, sir?" inquired Hobbs. "Most hextraordinary orders, and who the deuce is behind them, that's wot I'd like to know."

"We'll wait here, Hobbs," said Robin, and then put his hand suddenly to his heart. It was acting very queerly. For a moment he thought it was in danger of pounding its way out of his body!

Below him lay the lighted city, a great yellow cloud almost at his feet. Nearer, on the mountainside were the misty lights in the window of dwellers on the slope, and at points far apart the street lamps, dim splashes of light in the gloom. Far above were the almost obscured lights of St. Valentine, hanging in the sky. He thought of the monks up there. What a life! He would not be a monk, not he.

"My word!" exclaimed Hobbs, but instantly resumed his character as cabby.

A WOMAN came swiftly out of the blackness and stopped beside the cab. She was swathed in a long gossamer, and hooded. The carriage lamps gleamed strong against the dripping coat.

"Is it you?" cried Robin, throwing open the door and leaping to the ground.

"It is I, M'sieur," said the voice of Marie, Miss Guile's French maid.

Bleak disappointment filled his soul. He had hoped for — but no! He might have known. She would not meet him in this manner.

"What has happened?" he cried, grasping the girl's arm. "Has she ——"

"Sh! May we not speak in French?" said Marie, lowering her voice after a significant look at the motionless cabman. "He may understand English, M'sieur. My mistress has sent me to say to M'sieur that she has changed her mind."

"Changed her mind," gasped Robin.

"Yes, M'sieur. She will not receive you at the Inn of the Stars. She bids you drive to the end of this street, where there is a garden with a Magyar band, and the most delicious of refreshments to be had under vine-covered ——"

"A public garden?" exclaimed Robin in utter dismay.

"Pingari's, sir," said Hobbs, without thinking. "I know the place well. It is a very quiet, orderly place — I beg pardon!"

"So he understands French, eh?" cried Marie sharply.

"It doesn't matter," cried Robin impatiently. "Why, in heaven's name, did she select a public eating-house in which to receive me?"

"If M'sieur chooses to disregard the wishes of ——" began the maid, but he interrupted her.

"I am not accustomed to meeting people in public gardens. I ——"

"Nor is my mistress, M'sieur. I assure you it is the first time she has committed an indiscretion of this kind. May I put a flea in M'sieur's ear? The place is quite empty tonight, and besides there is the drive back to the Inn with Mademoiselle. Is not that something, M'sieur?"

"By jove!" exclaimed Robin. "Drive on, — you! But wait! Let me take you to the Inn, Marie. It ——"

"No! I may not accept M'sieur's thoughtful invitation. Bon soir, M'sieur."

She was off like a flash. Robin leaped nimbly into the cab.

"Pingari's, driver!" he said, his heart thumping once more.

"Very good, sir," and they were off at a lively rate, rattling quite gaily over the cobblestones.

Pingari's is the jumping-off place. It stands at the sharp corner of an elbow in the mountain, with an almost sheer drop of a thousand feet into the quarries below. A low-roofed, rambling building, once used as a troophouse for nomadic fighting men who came from all parts of the principality on draft by feudal barons in the days before real law o' 'ained, it was something of a historic place. Parts of the structure are said to be no less than five hundred years old.

Hobbs drove bravely into the court yard, shouted orders to a couple of hostlers and descended from the box. The Magyar band was playing blithely to the scattered occupants of the porches overlooking the precipice.

"'Ere we are, sir," said he to the Prince, as he jerked open the door of the cab. "Shall I wait, sir?"

"Certainly," said Robin, climbing out. "I am a long way from home, my good man."

He hurried up the steps and cast an eye about the place. There were no ladies unattached. As he was about to start on a tour of investigation, a polite person in brass buttons came up to him.

"Alone, sir?" he inquired pityingly.

"Quite," said Robin, still peering into the recesses.

"Then come with me, if you please. I am directed to escort you to one who is also alone. This way, sir."

The Prince of Graustark will be concluded in the next issue of our National Sunday Magazine.

Some Things Within Reason

By Thomas R. Marshall

Vice President of the United States

VICE PRESIDENT MARSHALL has a knack at epigrammatic utterance. Even in everyday conversation his remarks are likely to be thickly flecked with epigrams and quaint bits of philosophy. In fact it does not matter much whether one look for epigrams in his offhand talk or from a formal speech, for the epigrammatic sentence seems to be his most natural way of expressing whatever is on his mind. For example:

THE flag and the drum thrill the soldier but the saber and the musket win the battle.

Necessity is the mother of contention.

Not even Jefferson could make the Russian peasant a Democrat.

If I were a "higher critic" I would change one commandment to read: The sins of the children shall be visited on their parents.

I am for freedom. I want the right to sit in my narrow Presbyterian pew and to worship in my own narrow way, and I am willing to give you the whole outside world for your Methodist Hallelujahs.

We only truly live when we apprehend that life is a movement and not a monument.

It is well to long for the ideal; it is necessary to deal with the real.

I have no desire to sit before a desolate fireplace gazing at the dead embers of an unfortunate past.

It is not education but regeneration that the people need.

Freedom for us is a possession; not a gift.

Too many persons view life through a glass windshield.

The shalls and shall nots of desire, prejudice and expediency are so numerous as to lose the untrained man in a wilderness of doubt.

Mountain tops are mostly for visions. A glance and we go back to the dead levels of life.

Many of the ideals of the dreamer are beautiful water colors that are changed into indistinguishable blurs when taken out into the storms of actual life.

Many of the evils of life owe their origin and continuance to the fact that our knowledge of them is based on no data whatever.

Let this be the land of men, not laws; of love, not force; of principle, not expediency.

We have no aristocracy of blood and we are yet too young to have by any process of evolution an aristocracy of intellect and goodness.

We build our pedestals and we put our heroes on them, but we demand that, whenever our images have feet of clay, everybody shall have the right to tread on their toes with impunity.

That wealth is wise which can at the midnight hour look out upon a moon-flooded chamber and fear no man, and hear no angry knocks at the door of conscience.

The book of remembrance is too small to devote many lines to the man who has lived exclusively for himself. Who of us can recall the name of the richest man in Greece when Aristides made it just; the name of the richest man in Rome when Augustus found it brick and left it marble; the name of the richest man in England when Shakespeare sounded all the depths and shoals of human passion; who knows the name of the man who had the most money when Washington's footsore soldiery reddened the snows at Valley Forge; of the richest man in all the Southland when Pickett's brigade charged the bloody angle of Gettysburg. No one knows and no one cares.

When I wish to learn what the people are thinking of the administration at Washington, I do not turn to the metropolitan dailies, but I pick up my little paper from the old home town in Indiana, and if I find a favorable expression therein, then I know that all is right at Washington. It is in the little corner grocery store, where the male population sits of an evening around its fire, and "chaws terbacker" and eats sardines and crackers and discusses the issue of the day — it is there where the public sentiment of the country is truly reflected.

I think back through the years, the lean and fat, the good and the bad ones, to my earliest recollection. I see a woman with an eye that flashes swift as an archangel's wing and a mouth that breaks with laughter and hardens at sight of wrong, singing lullabies; a woman, who, with hand grasping the Unseen Hand, walks the briar-bordered paths of life unashamed, unafraid, unharmed. She is clad in garments of beauty for me, and age does not soil them nor years make them cheap and tawdry. Her tongue is without guile, having never been the messenger of a lie. It is seventeen years since her soul went home to God and her fingers became for me the fingers of an angel, but I have not forgotten all she said. She told me there was a Santa Claus, and I believe her. He brings me no longer drums and fifes. But he still brings to me the vision of my Mother and the music of that angelic chorus which sang at Creation's dawn and at the hour of man's redemption.

Many a man may have a fee simple title to a vast domain. He may erect thereon a splendid palace, fill it with all the luxuries of modern life, equip it with a retinue of servants; and yet, if it be but an abiding place for him, where he may eat, drink, sleep, it is not home; it is but a house that he owns. Upon the other hand he may own no foot of ground, he may dwell in a thatched cottage whose only adornment is a vine around the lintels of the door; barest necessities of life may be within and all the labor of its keeping may rest upon the woman of his heart; and yet, if, in the early morn he leave it with lagging footstep and in the dusk of eve he come back with hurrying tread, believing that within that vine-clad cottage there abides all of life that is worth the having, then, that man has a home.

Her Feminine Lure and Line

By Max Nordau

ONE would need to be a peasant from the Danube, or a Saskatchewan backwoodsman, to be ignorant that the word line, which formerly had all sorts of meanings, now has but a single one: the contour of the feminine silhouette, the delicate sinuosity which, starting from the proudly poised head, outlines the slender neck and the vigorous bust, suggests the curves of a scarcely defined outline, descends along lower limbs as finely modelled as those of a Diana, and stops at well-arched feet.

The fascination of the line is that it coquettishly approaches the vertical without ever becoming fixed in the coldness and stiffness of the straight line, that it always remains gracefully animated, living, and shaded, everywhere expressively suggestive, nowhere clumsy, that it always indicates, never vulgarly emphasizes. All this requires generous forms and excludes excessive stoutness. Thence proceed all the results of the line.

No previous fashion required anything from feminine modelling. The hoop and the bustle favored deformity. It was of no avail to have been modelled by nature like a goddess; padded shoulders, balloon sleeves, puffed skirts, concealed and destroyed these advantages; the dressmaker took advantage of his art to transform the Venus Anadyomene into the Hottentot Venus. The line came to restore woman's rights to perfection. There was no longer any opportunity to defraud. At least that is what was imagined by those artless persons who do not suspect the resources nor the expedients of the ingenious human mind. Defective specimens of humanity could no longer do anything except to hide their shame, the masterpieces would take their rightful position. In every feminine soul awoke the natural ambition to be among the elect. This ambition has produced the happiest eugenic results.

Eugenics? Women, at a stroke, have reached the goal that the library rats and the laboratory students will vainly strive to attain. The line imperiously required slenderness. Very well; woman became slender. To succeed in gaining this point, two ways were open: to grow slighter, or longer. We have witnessed this phenomenon which borders upon the miraculous — women becoming slender by the two simultaneous methods; they grew thinner, and they stretched. It is a fact: they have stretched themselves. Anthropometry permits no doubt of this. During these latter years, the feminine figure in the social class which is under the rule of fashion has increased by several centimeters. How has it been done? We have as yet no satisfactory explanation. The rationalists talk of the influence of feminine sports. The mystics prefer to believe in a victory of the will, that is, of mind over matter. However this may be, it is certain that at the present day, the fashionable woman is taller than before the reign of the line. Those who have been unable to add anything vertically to their stature, have at least had the faculty of lessening their diameter. And, for this purpose, the efficacy of the will is undeniable, without any necessity of venturing into the realm of mysticism. By a sort of higher inspiration, the value and beauty of thinness was revealed to women. More surely than all the medical teachings, fashion has inculcated a great biological truth: fat is the foe!

It was a victory in the history of the physiology of nutrition when, resting upon clinics, woman discovered the misdeeds of fat out of place. It renders the tissues heavy and clogs their work. It lessens the vital energy. It ages the organism. It prepares the way for declining powers and premature death.

Fat is an error which woman was first to recognize and set out to correct. Her example of force of will, perseverance, obstinacy in the pursuit of self-control, has had effects beyond the feminine sex. It has forced man to imitation. By the side of the supple, slender woman, he was ashamed of his heavy rotundity. He felt humiliated to appear near her like the round cipher by the slender unit which alone gives value to the group. He, too, tried to rid himself of his fat and to draw nearer to the athletic form. Thus the line has imbued character, awakened the virtues of sobriety, self-discipline, resistance to the attraction of luxuries; it has developed the taste for activity and energy, and transformed into beauty the external forms of civilized humanity.

This worship of the line distinguishes Europe from Asia, the West from the East. To the Oriental, the ideal of feminine beauty is the fat woman; the Western man considers her pitiable and repulsive; the woman who is to charm him must be slender and delicate. The gods of the yellow races are big-bellied. See the statues of Buddha, and especially the Chinese divinities. The whites have never had any gods except thin ones, in Valhalla, as well as on Olympus, without mentioning Golgotha. Asia has faith in fat, Europe in muscle. The former signifies passivity and calm, the latter energy and action. Japan conquered her Asiatic civilization of immobility and attached herself to the European culture of progress only on the day when she was converted to the line. Thus the fate of nations and the march of human evolution are explained by the attitude of the races toward the question: fat or thin?—in other words, toward the line.

Tabs on the Famous

By Fred C. Kelly

Admiral George Dewey goes to bed so early every night that he nearly always has all the sleep out of his system by four a. m. As a rule he has read the morning papers and most of some book by the time his breakfast is announced. At 9 o'clock he shows up at the office of the General Board of the Navy Department, of which he is president, and he works there until about noon. The rest of the day he devotes to amusing himself in whatever way the notion strikes him.

When James Curley, Mayor of Boston, was a member of Congress he had occasion one day to ask a favor of the Massachusetts fire commissioner. And the commissioner turned him down.

"I'll make a guess that you don't last long on this job," observed Curley. The words were prophetic. Shortly after that the fire commissioner was fired. Whereupon Curley at once sent him a congratulatory telegram in which he addressed him as "Former" Fire Commissioner.

Representative Robert E. Lee, of Pennsylvania, formerly a blacksmith, has excelled in almost every known character of athletic endeavor. Even now he can skate a mile backward in four minutes. He has a powerful physique like the man in the advertisements for a physical culture device, and the muscles of his brawny arms are as solid as those of an old-fashioned iron dog.

Recipe For Gray Hair

To half pint of water add 1 oz. Bay Rum, a small box of Barbo Compound, and ¼ oz. of glycerine. Apply to the hair twice a week until it becomes the desired shade. Any druggist can put this up or you can mix it at home at very little cost. Full directions for making and use come in each box of Barbo Compound. of us wearing clothes at all; you see right through folks."

Patsy scratched the top of his head with his thumb. "Aw, Doctor, it's only a flea-bite to what Bill Minden means to do. If he gets in as trustee—an' he will—for there's not twenty women in the place 'll go agin him, an' iviry man as is a man will go for him, then he'll stand for mayor an' run the dam place like a switchman at a junction. He won't talk; he'll just pull the lever, and there it'll all be done what he wants to be done, as aisy as aisy. He'll want the Education Committee to go on this track; he'll want the Lightin' Committee to go on that track; an' the Sanitairy Committee on another track; an' he won't talk; he'll switch the lot of thim where he wants thim. He'll be Mayor—that's what he'll be; but man alive, won't it be fun whin, mebbe, the Judge that thried him for stickin up a coach 'll visit the place, an' the Governor that signed his pardon 'll be here to pay us a visit! Who'll be receivin' thim— who'll be receivin' thim? Why, the new school-trustee, the man that's goin' to be Mayor—Bill Minden, who's stuck up as manny trains an' coaches as he's got fingers an' toes; Bill Minden, that's got monney in more banks than wan, and God help thim if they don't take care of his monney!"

The Young Doctor smiled and patted Kernaghan's shoulder. "You're a wonderful little fellow, Kernaghan. You've got a long eye, and see far ahead; and Minden wouldn't make a bad Mayor either. I think he'll make a good school-trustee too; but have you forgotten they're going to elect a Bishop when the Diocesan Synod of the English church meets here next month? Come now, Patsy, why shouldn't he stand for Bishop?"

PATSY scratched his head again. "Aw well, for a Protis'ant Bishop that 'd be all right. It doesn't require anny larnin' to be a Protis'ant Bishop. There's no layin' on of hands for wan av thim. They just talk of grace of Hivin an' the outpourin' of the spirit. Then the women weep and the men cough in their hands when they're lectured—an' why not Bill Minden? I'd as leave see him a Bishop as a Mayor."

The Young Doctor's eyes twinkled. "Well, so would I, Kernaghan. I wouldn't draw much distinction. I'd trust Minden just as much in one office as the other."

"Well, y'r honour, that's not saying how much ye trust him, is it?"

The Young Doctor's lips gave a quirk. "Do you hear anything against him, Patsy; anything you can lay your hands on since he came to Askatoon?"

"That's it, that's it," answered the little man from Cork; "there's nawthin' that annybody can lay hands on. Wipin' out his past, what he's doin' now needs no pinince; but leadin' the life that he's leadin' now, isn't it a burnin' shame they won't take him as he is—I mean the Methodies, the Protis'ants and the new comers! They won't believe in him till he's been saved at the 'marcy seat,' as they call it."

The twinkle quickened in the Young Doctor's eye. "Well, but won't there be a chance for that? Doesn't the big Methodist Camp-meeting begin soon out at Mayo—Nolan Doyle's place? What are all the big tents for? Isn't the Rev. Ephraim Masterman, the great revivalist, coming to save our souls and put Father Roche's nose out of joint?"

Kernaghan sniffed. "D'ye think Bill Minden 'd bellow out his pinitince at what they call a 'prothracted meetin'? Aw no, Doctor dear. We'll just go back to the idee I started with, and it's this: Bill Minden 'll be elected school trustee and when that's done he'll be elected Mayor, and whin that's done——"

Kernaghan protested with hands and head. "D'ye think Minden 'll go back to the ould ways of him—to the train robbin' and stickin' up the coach? D'ye think he hasn't enough money to live on without that? I've hard he has a hundred thousand dollars in the bank. That's a lot o' money. Can't a man stay honest on a hundred thousand dollars?"

At that moment several wagons went trailing past, carrying great piles of tent cloth, stakes and ropes. Kernaghan stared at them with swiftly-rising color. In religion he was a fanatic, and would have gone to the stake to defend the doctrine of transubstantiation or papal infallibility. The usual course of religious life in the town did not disturb him, but there was something so aggressive in this special spectacular effort of the heretics to advance their cause that a sudden anger flamed up in him.

"Look at it—look at it!" he snarled, "makin' a circus of the Christian religion, doin' the heavenly acrobatic!"

His colour deepened, his fingers opened and shut convulsively; then opened again. "Aw, look, Doctor dear, there's Minden now on his way to the school—to the Central School! It's a Friday afthernoon, an' he'll be lettin' himself go to the boys an' gurls."

The Young Doctor looked quizzically at Kernaghan. "And showing off before Miss Finley, eh?" he remarked.

"Aw, that! There's no showin' aff about it. Shure he drops his eyes whin he looks at her, like a bit of a boy tin years old."

The Young Doctor laughed inwardly. "Oh, Patsy Kernaghan, what Irish bulls you make and what an Irish calf you are! 'He drops his eyes when he looks at her!'"

THE Young Doctor was however thinking of what he himself said on the very first day of Minden's arrival in Askatoon, when the crowd gossiped about the notorious one in front of Rigby's drug store. He had said to Father Roche then, "If we only knew exactly why a man did some certain thing in his life, perhaps some very small thing, we would know his whole character. Now perhaps if we knew exactly why Bill Minden went to that school this afternoon we should have a Book of Revelations."

The Young Doctor was a man of insight and understanding, and he had never ceased to wonder why the ex-bandit interested himself so in the Central School, or why he had come to Askatoon. Somehow the two things seemed one in his mind, as though each depended on the other. That Minden should show such interest in the town itself, and that he should become school trustee, seemed one piece in which Cora Finley was part of the mosaic. He was sure there was an association with a mystery in the background. Bill Minden the ex-criminal, the notorious highwayman, turned peaceful, pious citizen, dropping his eyes when he looked at a girl, could only be explained by a law at work and not as one of life's vagaries.

The Young Doctor had seen and heard nothing which gave him a clue, and the fact that Mrs. Finley was the most implacable of Bill Minden's critics added another twist to the knot.

A MERRY CHRISTMAS
DECEMBER 25

No Woman

Raisins, madam, are "the gems of food"—Nature's parcels of pure, sun-made nutrition. Learn how to use them in a hundred delightful ways by sending for this book.

The book is printed in colors. It tells how California sun-made raisins are produced and why you should eat more of them.

There was never another book that gave so many suggestions of equal benefit to your entire family. You owe your children these raisins, and the foods that can be made with them. Their very well-being demands it.

Give them to the little folk as sweetmeats in place of rich candies that you know nothing about. They can eat all the raisins they want without any ill effects.

Here is "Nature's Candy"—here is the sugar they need, developed in pure grapes by California's golden sun alone. No adulteration. No artificial methods—just the purest sugar, produced in Nature's inimitable way.

These are California raisins — the finest raisins the world affords. The grapes from which they are made are so sweet, tender, and delicate that they cannot be shipped fresh to distant markets. So they are cured in the vineyards in California's wonderful sunshine and shipped to your dealers' stores as raisins.
